caste, 1 kast; 2 cást, n. 1. One of the hereditary classes into which society is divided among Hindu peoples by the religious laws of Brahmanism; also, the principle or custom of this division. The principal castes are the Brahmins (priests), Kshatriyas (warriors and rulers), Vaisyas (husbandmen and merchants), and Sudras (mechanics and laborers), besides Pariahs, or outcasts, who are considered to be of no caste. The first three castes represent the Aryan races, or the twice-born, while the Sudras, or the once-born, comprise the non-Aryan races vanquished by the Aryan invaders. These primal divisions, from various causes, have been split up into multitudinous sects, tribes, and sections, the Brahmins alone now forming a distinct group in Hindu society. There are many mixed castes, the object being always to make employments hereditary; as, the caste of sweepers; the caste of tanners and shoemakers. Socially the distinction of "high" and "low" caste is observed. The term is also applied to breed-animals; as, a high-caste Arab (horse).

JOHN BRIOUT Speeches, India, June 3, 1853 p. 17. [MACX. 1878.]

2. The division of society on artificial grounds, such as hereditary religious distinctions, privilege, wealth, etc.; a social class.

—c. press, n. An apparatus for subjecting molten metal to pressure in casting.—c. slab, n. A table on which molten glass is spread in manufacturing plate glass. c. tablet,—inlay c. (Ceram.), a process for producing a designed inlay of another color on the surface of a casting. See TABLE-SURFACE.—malleable castings, malleable iron. See under IRON.

Cast-é-lar, 1 kas-té-lar; 2 cás-té-lar, n. 1. Made of cast iron. 2. Like cast iron; rigid; unyielding; as, a cast-iron rule.

Cast-é-lar, 1 kas-té-lar; 2 cás-té-lar, n. 1. To place or enclose in or as in a castle or place of safety; fortify. 2. Chess. To cause (a king) to exchange relative positions with a castle or rook; protect with a castle. 3. To enclose with or in a building; cause to look like a castle.

II. t. Chess. To move the king two squares either to the right or left, at the same time bringing the castle from that side of the board toward which the king is moved to the square over which the king has passed. This move, which is made for the protection of the king, is not permitted if either the king or castle has been previously moved, or if the king is in check, or if the square over which he passes or that to which he goes is commanded by a hostile piece. See CHESS.

Cast-é-lar, 1 kas-té-lar; 2 cás-té-lar, n. 1. A strong fortress or fortified building; a stronghold; as, Dover Castle. It is often a fortified residence, sometimes including many buildings; as, Dublin, Edinburgh, or Windsor Castle. Castles in this sense are medieval and feudal in origin, the finest types being found in France, and in England after the Norman conquest. A commanding site was usually chosen and surrounded by a large deep ditch called the moat, and by strong walls flanked with towers. The buildings varied from a mere keep or donjon to a group including family apartments, hall, chapel, barracks, stables, etc. 2. A large modern mansion, solidly built, often imitating the style of a castle; a place of the medieval castle, but donjon; a quarters of the guard; h, great unfortified; also, watch-tower.

figuratively, any imaginative construction resembling imposing mansions or lordly castles; any building having the general appearance of a castle.

I lay on the grass and built castles in a bright pile of clouds, until I fell asleep.

DAVISO Sketch-Book p. 407. [A. V. F. 1860.]

3. A place where one should be able to rest in safety, or should be secure from attack or molestation; as, an Englishman's house is his castle; a floating castle (a large vessel, especially when armed). 4. A wooden tower or defensive structure, as on the back of an elephant or on the deck of a medieval ship. 5. Chess. A piece shaped like a battlemented tower or castle and capable of being moved up or down a file or along a row as far as the board is clear. It ranks next in importance to the queen. See CHESS. 6. A close helmet; casque. 7. Her. A castle or some suggestive feature, as an embattled gateway, as a bearing. [New York.] An Indian tribe's chief settlement. 8. In rabbit-hunting, a rabbit's hiding-place, as in brushwood enclosure ly, as a cat.—cat-footed, a. 1. Zool. Having digitated feet with claws retractile like a cat's. 2. Soft; stealthy:

cau/cus, 1 kŭ'kus; 2 cə'cŭs, v. [CAU'CUSED OR CAU'CUSSED, CAU'CUSTS; CAU'CUSING OR CAU'CUS-SING.] 1. To control or work by caucus.

II. f. To hold a caucus.

This occasioned some comment, much caucusing and threatening on the part of the Southern members, but nothing was accomplished. See Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. i, p. 286. [lc. co. 1890.]

— cau/cus-er, n. An advocate of the caucus system in politics; a participant in a caucus.

cau/cus, n. 1. [U. S.] A private meeting of members of a political party to select candidates or concert measures for adoption by the party. 2. Specifically: (1) A meeting of local voters to nominate for local offices, elect delegates to a nominating convention, or the like; a primary. (2) A meeting of representative members of a party, as in a legislative body, to determine on a policy or on special measures which shall be unitedly supported by the party membership in the deliberations or actions of the body. 3. Any meeting of similar character or for similar purposes, held by business men, as railway officials. 4. [Eng.] A political committee or other body in charge of a local canvass or election; often used in contempt or reproach: a misuse.

It was to this supposed imitation of the American political "machine" that Lord Beaconsfield gave the name caucus, and the name came to be used, not in the American sense of a meeting, but of a closely divided political organization.

Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. v, p. 556.

5. [Austral.] (1) A cabal, as of the Labor party in the federal or state parliaments to determine its vote on any issue before Parliament. (2) Hence, the Labor party itself; an opposition name.

Dr. William Gordon, author of the History of the American Revolution, writing in 1774, said: "More than fifty years ago, Mr. Samuel Adams's father, and twenty others, one or two from the north end of the town, where all ship business is carried on, used to meet and make a caucus, and lay their plan for introducing certain persons into places of trust and power." John Pickering, in his Vocabulary of Words Peculiar to the United States (Boston, 1816), assumed that the word was a corruption of calkers, and that calkers' meetings was meant, and he found that old residents of Boston and Salem had the same impression. The existence of a caucus club in Boston before the Revolution is attested in the quotation from John Adams, and Dr. J. H. Trumbull suggested in 1872 that the word might be derived from the Algonkin cau'-cau'-s'-u, one who advises, as Indian names were not infrequently adopted, in New England, for political societies and clubs.

This club, which called the Caucus Club meets, at certain times in the garret of Tom Dawes, the Adjutant of the Boston Regiment.

istence of, or the changes in, some other thing; agent or agency producing a result; as, gravitation is the cause of the stone's falling; malice is a cause of crime. See phrases below.

One of these self-evident, necessary truths is that every change or new existence requires a cause.

MIVART Nature and Thought ch. 5, p. 180. [K. P. & Co. 1882.]

2. Any occasion or condition upon the occurrence of which an event takes place; an occasion; a condition; as, darkness was the cause of the man's losing his way; low water in the boiler was the cause of the explosion. See CONDITION; OCCASION.

May there not be more than one cause singly adequate to produce enhanced wages? Westminster Review Oct., 1891, p. 354.

3. Any rational ground for choice or action; reason; motive; as, there is cause for joy; cause for complaint.

Say first, what cause

Moved our grand parents in that happy state?

MILTON P. L. bk. i, l. 28.

4. In a comprehensive sense, all the circumstances (powers, occasions, actions, and conditions) necessary for an event and necessarily followed by it; the entire antecedent of an event; the fundamental and philosophical conception of cause; in general, whatever in reality stands in relations analogous to those between a necessitated conclusion and its antecedent grounds. See CAUSALITY.

The modern conceptions of the nature of cause have chiefly divided into two groups, either that which follows Kant, who regarded cause as an a priori form of the understanding, or that which agrees with Hume in denying all knowledge of causal efficiency and regarding the conception of cause as simply the impression made by a uniform sequence of phenomena.

It is generally assumed that when two things are spoken of as cause and effect that their relation is a necessary one, or, in other words, that given the cause the effect must follow. . . . In so far as causation is regarded as necessary connexion, it can form no part of a purely empirical theory of existence. The senses can say only that in all observed cases B follows A and this does not establish necessary connexion.

Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. v, p. 557.

5. A great enterprise or movement supported by moral reasons and motives; an aim or object that engages the special interest, discussion, or efforts of an individual, association, or party; an important principle or aim; as, the cause of charity; the temperance cause.

Then conquer we must, when our cause it is just.

F. S. KEY Star-spangled Banner st. 4.

6. Law. (1) A ground of action. (2) An action or suit conducted in a court, or an entire judicial proceeding. 7. Civ. Law. The consideration of a contract; the motive of the party for entering into it. 8. [Archaic.] Behalf; interest; as, for his cause. 9. [Archaic.] The object or end toward which action is directed; purpose; aim. See FINAL CAUSE, under ARISTOTELIAN CAUSES, below. [F. & L. causa, cause.]

SYN. actor, agent, antecedent, author, causality, causation, condition, creator, designer, former, fountain, occasion, origin, originator, power, precedent, reason, source, spring. The efficient material, or substantial cause, that which makes anything to be or to become, is the common meaning of the word, as in the saying, "There is no effect without a cause." Every man instinctively recognizes himself acting through will as the cause of his own actions. The Creator is the Great First Cause of all things. A condition is something that necessarily precedes a result, but does not produce it. An antecedent simply precedes a result, with or without any agency in producing it; as, Monday is the invariable antecedent of Tuesday, but not the cause of it. The direct antecedent of an effect is effect, while that of antecedent is consequent. An action is some event which brings about the action at a particular moment; gravitation and heat are the causes of an avalanche; the steep incline of the mountain-side is a necessary condition, and the shout of the traveler may be the occasion of its fall. Causality is the doctrine or principle, causation the action or working of causes. See ANTECEDENT; CASE; DESIGN; PURPOSE; REASON; ANT-; CONSEQUENCE, creation, development, effect, end, event, fruit, issue, outgrowth, product, result.—PREP.: the cause of the disaster; cause for interference.

—accidental cause (Med.), any etiological factor which acts occasionally only, and which does not always produce the same or a fixed result.—adequate c., in Spinoza's philosophy, a cause clearly sufficient to produce its effect.—Aristotelian causes, the four following forms, as given by Aristotle: (1) formal c., the conception or idea of that which is to be realized, whether this idea exists in the nature of things or in the mind; (2) material c., that which is to be wrought upon by the idea, or formal cause; (3) efficient c., the force or agent that does the work; (4) final c., the object or end to be reached by the process. This division is architectonic and may be illustrated by the process of building, which involves (a) a plan, (b) some kind of material, (c) workmen, and (d) a completed and serviceable structure.—causal c. (Biol.), the interaction of one cell of a multicellular organism with the rest of the cells regarded as the determining factor of its differentiation and development.—centripetal c. (Biol.), the physical environment in which a cell or an organism lives regarded as a causative factor in the cell-development. See CENTRIFUGAL CAUSE.—First C., God as uncaused and as the original source of all power, change, motion, and life; styled by Plato and Aristotle the Prime Mover—for c., in law, for good and sufficient reason.—for one's c. [Archaic], for one's sake; for one's advantage; as, "I did it not for his cause," 2 Cor. vii, 12.—Immanent c., in Spinoza's philosophy, a cause which works within, and is intrinsic to, that which it produces as the effect.—Inadequate c., in Spinoza's philosophy, a cause not clearly sufficient to produce its effect.—occasional c. 1. See OCCASIONAL. 2. Occasionalism.—proximate c., a cause directly producing a result; specif., in law, the direct, immediate cause to which a loss is to be attributed; distinguished from the remote cause.—second c. (Theol. & Philos.), a cause other than the First Cause and itself an effect of that cause.—short c. (Law), a case which the court will permit to be advanced for hearing upon proof that such case will take no more time than that allowed by the court's rules.—testamentary c. (Law), any case coming under the jurisdiction of probate courts; dealing with wills, testamentary documents, etc.—to make common c. with, to take the same side with; engage in anything with.—transcendent c., in Spinoza's philosophy, a cause producing an effect differing from itself.

causeless, 1 kō'les; 2 cā'les, a. 1. Having no just ground or reason; groundless.

2. Ecl. To punish by a public reprimand with or without some other penalty. 3. To pass judgment or judicial sentence upon; pronounce an opinion of; estimate; criticize. 4. To exercise censorship over.

II. v. To form or give an opinion or judgment. [< F. censurer, < censurer; see CENSURE, n.] Syn. see ADMONISH; ARRANG; BLAME; CARP; CHIDE; CONDEMN; REPROVE.—Prep. for—cen'sur-er, n.

cen'sure, n. 1. The act of censuring; expression of disapproval or blame, as in an authoritative manner or by way of admonition; adverse criticism; reproach. A man must serve his time to every trade. Save censure—critic all ready made. BYRON English Bards and Scotch Reviewers st. 5.

2. Reprimand or discipline administered by ecclesiastical or political authority. The bishops and abbots... engaged to enforce the due execution of the treaty by ecclesiastical censures. LINCOLN England vol. ii, p. 149. [A. C. 1827.]

3. [Rare.] The office or function of a censor; censorship. 4. Critical recension of a literary work; revision. 5. A formal judgment or judicial sentence; opinion. 6. An assessment. [F. < L. censura, < censo, judge.] cen'sure, Syn. see ANIMADVERSION—cen'sure-less, a.—cen'sure-ship, n. Censorship.—cen'sur-er, n. A professed censor.

cen'sus, 1 sēn'sus; 2 cēn'sūs, n. To take a census of; to count in a census.

cen'sus, 1 sēn'sus; 2 cēn'sūs, n. 1. An official numbering of the people of a country or district, with the collecting of various statistics of nativity, age, sex, employment, possessions, etc.; also, the printed record of it made in the United States since 1790, and in Great Britain since 1801, every ten years. Decennial censuses of the British Empire have been taken since 1871. 2. In ancient Rome, a somewhat similar enumeration of the people, but with special reference to their property, in order to determine taxation. 3. Hence, any enumeration. A census of all those who have received legacies. BULWER-LYTTON Eugene Aram p. 132. [A. & S.]

4. Law. A ground-rent. 5. A poll-tax. [L. < censo, pp. census, assess.]—Bureau of Census [U. S.]. See under BUREAU.

cent, 1 sēt; 2 cēt, n. 1. The hundredth part of a dollar, in the United States, Liberia, Canada, and many other British colonies; equal to a halfpenny in England; in the United States a coin now weighing 48 grains—95 per cent. copper and 5 per cent. zinc. It is a legal tender for all sums not exceeding twenty-five cents.

It introduced the system of decimal notation, invented the word 'cent',... and nationalized the already familiar word 'dollar'. T. ROOSEVELT Governor Morris p. 104. [A. M. & C. 1883.]

2. Centum or cento, hundred; an abbreviation; chiefly in the phrase per cent. See PER. 3. The hundredth part of a standard unit in other money systems besides that of the United States, as of the florin of the Netherlands. Equivalent forms are the centime, centavo, and centesimo (which see in the table of coins, under COIN). 4. A centime. 5. In Ceylon, British East Africa, etc., the hundredth part of a rupee. 6. Mus. The hundredth of an equal semitone. 7. An old game of cards in which 100 was the game; also, an ombre, a large counter. [F. < L. centum, hundred.]

—elephant cent, a copper token that bore the figure of an elephant on one side, struck in England for the Carolinas Censer or Thurible. Medieval English, silver-gilt.

Fugio Cent of 1782, showing obverse and reverse. In 1694.—Franklin c., same as FUGIO CENT.—Fugio c., a copper coin authorized by the Congress having "Fugio" as its inscription.

The Fugio or Franklin cents are the earliest coins issued by authority of the United States.

EVANS Hist. of the U. S. Mint p. 73. [AUTHOR 1856.]

—per cent, see PER—ring c., a fugio cent; so called because one side bore thirteen rings linked together;—silver-center c., a cent coined in 1793 that had a silver centerpiece—sun-dial c., a fugio cent; so called because a sundial formed a part of the device it bore.—wreath c., a cent coined by the United States in 1793 that bore the design of a wreath.

cen'tal, 1 sen'tal; 2 cēn'tal, a. Of or pertaining to a hundred.

cen'tal, n. An English weight of 100 pounds avoirdupois, the same as the hundredweight of the United States; used in the Liverpool grain-market since 1859 and legalized in 1879. [< L. centum, hundred.] cen'ter; quin'tal. — cental system, the system of buying and selling by the cental.

cen'tare, 1 sen'tār or (F.) san'tār; 2 cēn'tār or (F.) cān'tār, n. In the metric system, a square meter = 1.1959 or nearly 1 1/2 square yards; the hundredth part of an are. [< F. centiare, < L. centum, hundred, + area, place of ground.] See table of MEASURES.

cen'ta'ro, 1 sen-tā'ro; 2 cēn-tā'ro, n. [Cen. Am.] A cantar.

cen'taur, 1 sen'tor; 2 cēn'tar, n. 1. A fabled monster

A Centaur.

Statue in the Capitoline Museum, Rome.

having the head, arms, and body of a man from the waist up, united to the body and legs of a horse. In the earliest type the trunk and hind quarters of a horse are joined to a complete human body. See CHIRON, IXION, LAPITHAE, NESSUS.

2. Figuratively, a person or thing viewed as an incongruous union of diverse natures. 3. [C.] Centaurus. See CONSTELLATION. [< L. centaurus, < Gr. kentaurus, centaur, perhaps < kentē, goat; -cen'taur-dom, n. The condition of centaurs.] cen'taur-esque, a. Having the style of a centaur. — cen'taur-ess, n. — cen'taur-ial, a. Of or pertaining to a centaur. — cen'taur-ian, a. Having the nature of a centaur. — cen'taur-ist, n. — cen'taur-ize, v. [Rare.] To behave as brutally as a centaur. — cen'taur-like, a.

Cen'tau're-a, 1 sen-tō'ri; 2 cēn-tā'ri-a, n. Bot. 1. A very large genus of Old World herbs of the aster family, chiefly perennial; the star-thistles. They have radical or alternate leaves and solitary or panicle heads of usually purplish tubular flowers. Several European species are roadside weeds in the United States or are cultivated in old gardens. See ILLUS. under BLUEBOTTLE. 2. [C.] A plant of this genus. [< L. centaurum, < Gr. kentaurion, < kentaurus, centaur.] cen'tau-rin, cen'tau-rite, 1 sen-tō'ri-n; 2 cēn-tā'ri-n, -rit, n. Same as ERYTHROCENTAURIN.

cen'tau-rom'a-chy, 1 sen-tō'rom'a-chy; 2 cēn-tā'rom'a-chy, n. A battle between centaurs, or between centaurs and men; a subject treated in Greek mythology and art. [< L. Centauromachia, a poem, < Gr. Kentauromachia, < kentaurus, centaur, + machē, fight, < machomai, fight.] cen'tau-ro-ma'chi-at.

cen'tau-ry, 1 sen-tō'ri; 2 cēn-tā'ri, n. [RIES, 1-riz; 2-ris, pl.] 1. One of various herbs of the gentian family, as of the genera Sabbatia and Erythraea, and Chlora perfoliata; especially, Erythraea centaurium. 2. A centaurea. 3. A milkwort (Polygala polygama). [< L. centaurum; see CENTAUREA.] cen'tau'ret, n. — American centaury, any species of Sabbatia, especially the rose-pink (S. angulata). — American red centaury, — lesser centaury, the European garden annual Erythraea centaurium.

cen'ta'ro, 1 cēn-tā'ro; 2 cēn-tā'ro, n. 1. [Sp. and Sp.-Am.] A small nickel or copper coin of Central and South America, in value from six-tenths of a cent (actual) to one cent (nominal); the hundredth part of a peso. — cen'ta'vat; cen'te'na; cen'tes'im-oi. 2. A Portuguese coin. [COIN.]

cen'ten, 1 sen'ten; 2 cēn'ten, n. A Spanish coin. See cen'te-na'ri-al, 1 sen-ti-nē'ri-al; 2 cēn-te-na'ri-al, a. [Rare.] Of or pertaining to a centenary or centennial.

cen'te-na'ri-an, 1 sen-ti-nē'ri-an; 2 cēn-te-na'ri-an, a. Of or pertaining to the age of a hundred years, or to a centenary. [< L. centenarius; see CENTENARY, a.] cen'te-na'ri-an, n. One who has reached the age of a hundred years. — cen'te-na'ri-an-ism, n. The state of being a centenarian.

cen'te-na'ri-us, 1 sen-ti-nē'ri-us; 2 cēn-te-na'ri-us, n. [—i, 1-ai; 2-i, pl.] [LL.] Salic Law. The chief of a hundred, probably chosen by the people.

cen'ten-a'ri-ze, 1 sen-tēn-a'riz; 2 cēn-tēn-a'riz, v. [—RIZED; —RIZING.] To honor with a centenary celebration.

cen'te-na-ry, 1 sen-ti-nē'ri; 2 cēn-te-na-ry, a. 1. Of or pertaining to a hundred or a period of a hundred years. Careful writers often take the adjective centenary refer to 100 and centennial to 100 years; as, a centenary (hundredth) celebration; a centennial celebration (on the hundredth anniversary). A centenary may be a period of a hundred years; a centennial is the close of that period or its commemoration.

2. Of or pertaining to a county subdivision, the hundred of a shire or pagus, as in England; as, centenary deputies. [< L. centenarius, < centeni, a hundred each, < centum, hundred.] cen'te-na'ri-ous.

cen'te-na-ry, n. [—RIES, 1-riz; 2-ris, pl.] 1. A hundredth anniversary or its celebration; centennial occasion. 2. A hundred years in the life of a person or institution; a period of a hundred years; centennium. 3. [Rare.] A centenarian. 4. A hundredweight.

cen'tence, n. A sentence.

cen'te-nier, 1 sen-ti-nē'ri; 2 cēn-te-nēr, n. [F.] 1. In the Channel Islands, a constable. 2. A centurion.

cen'ten-ni-al, 1 sen-tēn'i-al; 2 cēn-tēn'i-al, a. Of or pertaining to a hundredth anniversary; a hundred years old or more; completing a century; as, a centennial celebration. [< L. centum, hundred, + annus, year.]

Under this ancient olive-tree, that spreads its broad centennial branches like a tent, Let us lie down and rest.

— Centennial State (U. S. Hist.), Colorado, because admitted into the Union in 1876, the hundredth year of American Independence. — cen'ten-ni-al-ly, adv.

cen'ten-ni-al, n. The hundredth anniversary of an event, or its commemoration; a centenary; first applied to the United States Centennial Exhibition of 1876. — cen'ten-ni-al-ize, v.

cen'ten-ni-um, 1 sen-tēn'i-um; 2 cēn-tēn'i-um, n. A century.

cen'ter, 1 sen'ter; 2 cēn'ter, v. [CEN'TERED OR CEN'TRE, TREED; CEN'TERS; CEN'TER-ING OR CEN'TRING.]

1. 1. To place in the center; fix on a center; supply with a center.

2. To draw to a center; concentrate. 3. To determine the center of; shape (a lens) so as to have it thickest in the center.

II. 1. To be in the center. 2. To gather or converge in a center.

Man! know thyself. All wisdom centres there. Young Night Thoughts iv, l. 484.

cen'ter', n. 1. The point or place equally distant from the extremities, or from the different sides of anything; the middle; as, the center of the town; the center of the throng.

Had earth been then, all earth Had to her centre shook. Milton P. L. bk. vi, l. 217.

2. The point, object, or place about which things cluster or to which they converge; a fixed point or line about which a thing or things revolve; point of attraction or convergence; focal point; as, the center of interest.

Athena was the intellectual centre of Greece, and of ancient Europe. T. E. Max Democracy in Europe vol. i, p. 70. L. & S. 1889.]

3. The point of divergence, emanation, or radiation; nucleus; origin; as, the center of corruption. 4. Geom. The middle point of a closed curve or surface; properly, a point such that any straight line drawn through it will meet the curve or surface at equal distances on each side of the point. 5. The part of a target next the bull's-eye, or a shot striking this part. 6. Anat. (1) A region of special activity; as, a center of ossification. (2) An aggregation of nerve-cells related to some special physiological function; as, the respiratory center. 7. [C.] In Continental legislatures, the members sitting on the middle benches and holding usually intermediate views between the Left, or Radicals and Liberals, and the Right, or Conservatives; in Germany, the Clerical or Ultramontane party. The Moderate Conservatives and the Moderate Liberals are often called respectively the Right and the Left Center, whether acting with or independently of the Ministry. 8. A leader, as among the Fenians, the chief one being the head center. 9. Mil. (1) The middle part of an army in order of battle, occupying the front between the wings. (2) The middle soldier in a line. 10. Naut. In the order of sailing of a fleet, the division between the weather and the lee; in line of battle, that between the van and the rear. 11. Arch. The support, usually a timber framework, of an arch, or of a concrete lintel, floor, roof, or dome, while building; centering. 12. Steam-engine. One of the two points in the rotation of a crank at which the middle points of the crank-pin, the crosshead-pin, and the main shaft are in line. 13. Physics. The point in which the entire mass of a body or system of bodies could be concentrated without affecting some particular result; as, the center of gravity; center of oscillation. See phrases. 14. Mech. One of two conical points, as in a lathe, between which an object is held and rotated on an axial line. The one at the end from which the object is rotated is the live-center, the other the dead-center. 15. The person who takes the middle position of the forward line in many athletic games, as football, basketball, etc. 16. Same as CENTER FIELD, CENTER-FIELDER. 17. One of the standard openings in the game of checkers. 18. A thin piece of celluloid or similar material used as a foundation for the sharp point of compasses. [F., < L. centrum, < Gr. kentron, < kentēō, prick.]

Syn: middle, midst. We speak of the center of a circle, the middle of a room, the middle of the street, the midst of a forest. The center is equally distant from every point of the circumference of a circle, or from the opposite boundaries on each axis of a parallelogram, etc., the middle is more general and less definite. The center is a point; the middle may be a line or a space. We say at the center; in the middle. Midst commonly implies a group or multitude of surrounding objects. Compare synonyms for AMID.—Ant: circumference, perimeter, rim.

— accelerating center, the nerve-center situated in the medulla oblongata whose stimulation produces increased cardiac action. — apperception c., any cortical center to which are hypothetically assigned the functions connected with the mental process of clear perception. — association c., any cortical area whose function is to associate the functions of neighboring or more distant areas. — auditory c., the center for the auditory nerve. See under MEMORY. — Broca's c., same as SPEECH-CENTER. — cen'ter-bar', n. The arbor of a drill-press or some similar machine. — c.-bit, n. See BIT.—c.-chisel, n. A sharp-pointed cold-chisel for marking a starting-point, as for a drill. — c.-chuck, n. Mech. A lathe-chuck with a hardened cone field and a projecting driver, screwed on the mandrel. — c. field (Baseball & Cricket), the middle portion of the outfield. — c.-felder, n. Baseball. The player at center field. — c.-fire, a. Having the fulminate in the center, instead of about the edge of the head of the cartridge. — c.-gage, n. 1. An outside angle-gage for lathe-center points. 2. In car-building, a gage for fixing the center of length of an axle. — c.-lathe, n. Mech. 1. A lathe in which the work is carried in centers: the ordinary form. 2. A pole-lathe. — c. of action (Meteor.), a term applied to each of certain large areas of high or low barometric pressure that are more or less permanent through a season of the year. Variations in their intensity or position are associated with wide-spread weather changes. — c. of a focus, a point bisecting all chords of the locus drawn through it. — c. of area, 1. In an area of regular shape, the geometric center. 2. In any area, the center of gravity. — c. of a sheaf (Math.), that point through which all its lines or planes pass. — c. of attraction, a point toward which attracting forces are directed; figuratively, a person or object that attracts the regard of all. — c. of Budge, a nerve-center located in the lumbar region of the spinal cord, whose stimulation causes penile erection in males and uterine contractions in females. — c. of buoyancy, the center of mass of the volume of water that a floating body displaces. — c. of cavity, a metacenter. — c. of collimation, the joint in the same straight line with each pair of corresponding points of two perspective figures. — c. of compression, in a body under stress, the point at which the resultant of the compressive forces acts; the compressional center of gravity. — c. of contact, the intersection point of two lines drawn tangent at two contact points of two plane curves or conics. — c. of conversion, the point about which a body turns under the force of an impact. — c. of curvature, the center of the osculating circle of any point of a curve. — c. of effort, that theoretical point at which the force of the wind, if it could be applied there, would impel a vessel in the same way as if uniformly distributed among all the sails. — c. of figure (Math.), a point which is at the mean distance of all points of the figure from any plane of the figure. — c. of flotation, the geometrical center of a section produced by the intersection of a plane, represented by the surface of the water, with a body floating in the water. Compare METACENTER. — c. of form, the geometric center as opposed to mechanical centers such as those of gravity or oscillation. — c. of friction, a point in the base of a body which is revolving around a vertical axis, the base acting as a bearing, upon which the whole weight of the body could be concentrated without changing its present frictional resistance to rotary motion. — c. of gravity, see CENTER OF MASS. — c. of gyration, a point in which the whole mass of a body might be concentrated without altering its moment of inertia. — c. of homology, the intersection of the junction-lines of corresponding points in two homologous figures. — c. of homothety, same as CENTER OF SIMILITUDE. — c. of immersion, same as CENTER OF BUOYANCY. — c. of inertia, same as CENTER OF GRAVITY. — c. of inversion, c. of involution, see under INVERSION, etc. — c. of lateral resistance (Naut. Arch.), the resultant center of the water-pressures which act in an opposite direction to the sidewise pressure caused by the action of the wind on the sail. — c. of mass, the point in which a body acted on by gravity or other parallel forces is balanced in all positions: commonly but incorrectly called the center of gravity. — c. of mean distances (Math.), a point in a line of which the algebraic sum of its distances from a series of other points on the same line is equal to zero. — c. of motion, that point in a body which remains at rest while all the other parts of such body continue to revolve around it. — c. of oscillation, the point in which the whole mass of a pendulum were concentrated it would oscillate in the same time that it actually does. — c. of ossification, the point from which the ossification of a bone starts. — c. of percussion, that point in which a body rotating round an axis might be struck without causing any pressure on the axis. — c. of perspective, same as CENTER OF COLLINATION. — c. of population, the point in a country on which its map would balance were it made of sheet metal and varied in thickness proportionately to population. Thus, in calculating the center, the distance of a region as well as the number of its inhabitants must be taken into account. The center of population in the United States was in 1790 23 miles east of Baltimore, Md.; in 1890 it had moved to a point 20 miles east of Columbus, Ind., and in 1910 it was located in the western part of Bloomington, Monroe county, Ind. — c. of pressure. 1. Phys. The point on a body at which the application of a given pressure will produce the same result as the same pressure when distributed over the body. 2. Specif. (1) The point of a body that must receive support in order to retain equilibrium when a wind is blowing upon its surface. (2) The point in a surface immersed in a fluid at which a pressure equal to that of the fluid, if exerted in a contrary direction, will balance or counteract the pressure of the fluid. 3. The point at which an aeroplane surface is intersected by the resultant of all the pressures acting on the surface. ORVILLE WRIGHT. — c. of projection. 1. Any one of several motor and sensory areas or centers in the brain-cortex. 2. A point from which straight lines are drawn to all the points, and planes to all the lines, in a geometric figure. — c. of resistance, in a joint, the intersection of the resultant stress with the joint. — c. of simile, Math., the point of intersection of all the straight lines connecting corresponding points in two similar geometric figures which are similarly or oppositely placed. — c. of spherical curvature, the geometric center of an osculating sphere. — c. of symmetry, the center of a symmetrical figure. — c. of tension, in a body under tension, the point at which the resultant of the tensile forces may be assumed to act. — c. of vision. 1. The point of keenest vision upon the retina of the eye; the yellow spot or macula lutea. 2. Same as POINT OF VIEW. — cen'ter-piece', n. An ornament in the center of a ceiling, table, etc., or between other ornaments. — c.-pin, n. Mech. A pin which is at the center of rotation of the object which it supports. — c.-plate, n. Mech. An plate serving as a central support, etc. — c.-punch, n. Mech. A center-punch. 2. A mark made by a center-punch in a piece of metal to be drilled. — c.-saw, n. A sawing-machine that rips logs radially toward their center, as for spokes, ax-handles, etc. — c.-seal, n. Same as CENTER-VALVE. — c.-second, a. Having the second hand mounted on the same arbor as the other hands. — c.-square, n. An instrument which, when adjusted, finds the center of a circle. — c.-table, n. A table for the center of a room. — c.-tester, n. An apparatus serving to locate accurately the center of a piece of work in a lathe and also for verifying the exactness of the center of a lathe. — c. in gas-valve, a valve having a four-way valve allowing the gas to separate into the passers. — c.-valve, n. Same as CENTER OF EFFORT. — dead c., same as CENTER. — c.-diabetic c., the nerve-center in the floor of the fourth ventricle of the brain, that controls carbohydrate digestion and assimilation, and that when diseased or injured gives rise to diabetes. — direct c. of similitude, a center of similitude which has the perspective seats, which correspond to each other, occurring on the same side of it. — eruptive c. (Geol.), the locality in a volcanic region where the eruptive activity is the greatest; a place whence volcanic rocks issue. — genital or genitalospinal c., same as CENTER OF BUDDING. — gustatory c., the nerve-center believed to be situated in the gyrus uncinatus in the brain, which receives the sense-impressions of taste. — heat c., n. Physiol. A nerve-center that controls or regulates the heat of the body. A center for the production of heat (thermogenic c.) is thought to exist in the optic thalamus or corpus striatum of the brain, and one for lowering heat (thermolytic c.) in the medulla oblongata. — instantaneous c. 1. Mech. A point about which a moving part in a mechanism is supposed to rotate at a given instant. 2. Kinematics. The intersection of the instantaneous axis with the guide plane in motion of two directly-conjugate kinematic (Embryol.) the centrosomes or centrospheres at the poles of the nucleus of the fertilized ovum. — motor c., any nerve-center that controls muscular action; often used specifically for the centers along the fissure of Rolando of the brain that, through the spinal cord, induce muscular contraction. — olfactory c., the nerve-center in the brain which receives the impressions of smell, thought to be situated in the cortex of the hippocampal gyrus. — oval c., the white matter of the cerebrum when the upper part of the cerebral hemispheres are removed. — phrenic c., the central tendon of the diaphragm. — psychical c., one of those aggregations of nerve-cells in the brain that are not motor, sensory, or sensory-motor, but which deal with higher mental functions. — speech c., the cortical area specially concerned with the movements necessary for articulate speech. — thermogenic c., thermolytic c., see under HEAT CENTER. — virtual c., same as INSTANTANEOUS CENTER. — visual c., the center in the brain that controls the faculty of sight; apparently situated in the cuneus.

cen'ter-board, 1 sen'ter-bôrd; 2 cên'ter-bôrd, n. 1.

Naut. A movable vertical device, as of wood, pivoted or hung on a rod at the lower forward end, and enclosed within the well or slot of a water-tight compartment in the bottom of a vessel so that it can be lowered or raised to increase or lessen the draft. The centerboard, sometimes called in England drop-keel or sliding keel, used in the United States largely on fore-and-aft rigged vessels, especially yachts and catboats. It is usually lowered when sailing on the wind, to prevent leeway, and raised when sailing before the wind.

1. Side view, lowered. 2. End view, lowered.

2. A boat having a centerboard. — cen'ter-board, trunk, n. Naut. The box in which the centerboard is moved up or down, as required.

cen'ter-ing, 1 sen'ter-ing; 2 cên'ter-ing, n. 1. The act or operation of bringing an object within the focus of a microscope, telescope, etc. 2. The act or operation of cutting a shallow hole in the center of an object, for mounting between lathe- or planer-centers. 3. Arch. See CENTER, n. 11. — cen'ter-ing, trunk, n. 1. A device for marking a center. See CENTERING, 2. — cen'ter, n. Mech. A V-shaped device attached to a lathe which enables the turner to ascertain and mark the center of any cylindrical piece when placed in the machine. — cen'ter, n. A tool for making a central conical hole in the end of work to be mounted between lathe-centers.

Cen'ter-ville, 1 sen'tar-vîl; 2 cên'ter-vîl, n. 1. A city, county-seat of Appanoose county, Iowa. 2. A small village in Fairfax county, Va., near the scene of the first battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861. 3. A town in Queen Anne county, Md.

cen'tes'i-mal, 1 sen-tes'i-mal; 2 cên-tes'i-mal, a. 1. Hundredth. 2. Belonging to a system in which one unit is the hundredth of the next higher one, especially the angular units formed by dividing the right angle into 100 degrees, or grades, the grade into 100 minutes, and the minute into 100 seconds. 3. Graduated to a scale of a hundred; as, the centesimal thermometer, a form applied to the centigrade thermometer. [L. centesimus, < centum, hundred; — cen-tes-i-mal-ly, adv.]

cen'tes'i-mate, 1 sen-tes'i-mät; 2 cên-tes'i-mät, vt. [MAT; — *MAT*ING.] To take one in every hundred of for punishment, as mutineers or deserters. — cen-tes'i-ma-tion, n.

cen'tes'i-mo, 1 sen-tes'i-mô; 2 cên-tes'i-mô, n. [It. & Sp.] The hundredth part of various monetary units. See COIN.

cen'te'sis, 1 sen-të'sis; 2 cên-të'sis, n. Surp. Perforation, as of the walls of the abdomen for the relief of ovarian dropsy. [Gr. kentesis, a pricking, < kentō, prick.] par'a-cen-te'sis.

Cen'te'ti-dæ, 1 sen-të-ti-dë; 2 cên-të-ti-dë, n. pl. Mam. A family of insectivores, especially those without constriction between the orbits, and with a retractile penis; including the hedgehog-like tenrecs of Madagascar. Cen'te'tes, n. (t. g.) [Gr. kentēs, piercer, < kentō, pierce.] — cen'te'tid, n. — cen'te'toid, a. & n.

— luff c., the chain by which the leader is attached to the pole in a five-horse team.— ground c. (Naut.), a length of chain used, when weighing the anchor, to swing it clear of the vessel.— ladder c. (Mech.) a chain ladder, like in form.

—ladies' c. (Danc'ing), a movement in the second figure of a quadrille.—lateral-c. theory (Pathol.), a theory advanced by Professor Ehrlich to account for cell-nutrition, immunity, etc. It assumes that every active living cell possesses two chemical groups; a central one which carries on the ordinary vital activities, and a substitution or "side-chain" group that combines with nutrient materials, toxins, etc. The arrest of function caused by the saturation of the side-chain group causes the central group to generate new side-chains, which may be formed in considerable numbers. The superfluous side-chains are thrown off from the cell, circulate in the blood, and act as antitoxins by their power to arrest the toxins of invading organisms. See Macromorphosis, toxopneous, zymosis.—machine c. (Mech.), any machine-made chain; especially a chain made up of oval-shaped links in which the small end of each link is passed through the large end of the following link and twisted at right angles, after which it is welded.—monobar c., a chain-like arrangement of endless knuckle-jointed bars to which short projecting flights or boards are attached that act as conveyors by pushing coal, grain, etc., along a fixed trough-like channel to a loading-place.—open c. (Chem.), a number of atoms so united as to form a chain whose ends are open and not joined together. This structure is characteristic of the aliphatic compounds.—slide-c. theory, Ehrlich's lateral-chain theory.—silent c., a power-chain which passes noiselessly over sprocket-wheels.—steep-top c., an endless chain to the upper part of the links of which projecting covers are fitted that may be used as conveyers when two or more chains are placed side by side.—surveyors' c., see CHAIN, 5.

chained, 1 chēnd; 2 chānd, n. 1. Fettered; secured or chained, bound with a chain. 2. Adorned or furnished with a chain or chains.—Chained Lady, Andromeda.

chain'less, 1 chēn'les; 2 chān'les, n. 1. Free from chains; incapable of being fettered or bound.

The chainless winds were all at rest.

BRYANT Romero intro., l. 25.

2. Operated without a chain-gear.

chain'wise, 1 chēn'wīz; 2 chān'wīz, adv. In a linked or connected manner.

chair, 1 chār; 2 chār, n. 1. To put into a chair, especially a chair of office; install.

Yes, and thou Chair'd in his place.

LENTON Harold act i, sc. 2.

2. To carry in a chair; bear aloft triumphantly in a chair; as, to chair a successful candidate. 3. To furnish with a chair or chairs.

chair', 1. A single seat, usually movable and with four legs, having always a back, and often arms.

Chairs are named (1) from the material used; as, cane chair, bentwood c., etc.; (2) from the purpose for which they are designed; as, barbers' c., dentists' c., obstetrical c., etc.; (3) from their construction; as, double c., folding c., rocking-c., etc.

2. A seat of office; also, the office itself. Specifically:

(1) A college professorship.

The Frémont campaign of 1856 taught Americans more than a hundred colleges; and John Brown's pulpit at Harper's Ferry was equal to any ten thousand ordinary chairs.

PHILLIPS in Martyn's Wendell Phillips p. 578. [r. & w. 1890.]

(2) The seat or post of the presiding officer in a deliberative body; sometimes, by metonymy, the officer himself; as, address the chair. See CHAIRMAN.

(3) [U. S.] The office of President; also, that of Governor. (4) [Gr. Brit.] Mayoralty. (5) [Archaic.] Same as SEAT, n., 1. (6) [Archaic.] A pulpit. (7) The office of a judge.

3. Railway. An iron block (1) for fastening rails to the ties where exposed to lateral strain, and (2) for supporting rails or raising them above the sleepers, as in street-railway tracks. 4. [Archaic.] A conveyance with or without wheels for one person, as a sedan chair, or a light chaise or gig.

His majesty [George I.] only uses a chair with six footmen walking before and six women of the guard at the sides of the sedan.

THACKERAY Four Georges ch. i, p. 208. [L. C.] clump; ch. chair.

—boatswain's chair, a strip of wood slung by ropes through the ends, and used as a hanging seat, as for a ship's painter, or other worker. See ILLUS. under BOATSWAIN.

—chair'bal'ance, n. A spring balance having a suspended chair in which to seat persons to be weighed.—c-bed, n. A support for a sick person. See BED-CHAIR.—c-board, n. A chair-rail.—c-car, n. A parlor-car having single arm-chairs instead of the usual double seats.—c-days, n. pl. Old age, as the time for repose in a chair.—c. of St. Peter, the office of the Pope of Rome: so called from the tradition ascribing its foundation to St. Peter; also, the seat from which he is said to have presided.—c. of state, the seat or office of a ruler or chief executive.—c-rail, n. A narrow strip of board around the walls of a room as a guard against chair-backs.—c-web, n. A scroll-saw.—conversation c., a chair of the Louis Seize or kindred Sheraton style, provided with a cushion upon the top of the back to support the arms of the sitter who sits astride the seat and facing the back.—double c., a sofa for two.—electric c., a chair used in electricity. See ILLUS. under ELECTRICITY.—grandfather c., a wing chair of Queen Anne's period.—hackney c., a public chair for one or two hire; as in old usage, a sedan or Bath chair.—locomotive c., a wheeled chair that may be propelled by its occupant.—Morris c., a large easy chair with arms usually extending beyond the back of the chair, which is adjustable at various angles, usually fully fitted with cushions: named after William Morris, the poet, its reputed designer.—St. Peter's c., either of the two Roman Catholic festivals occurring on Jan. 18 and Feb. 22, in commemoration of the supposed founding of the Roman and Antiochian episcopates by St. Peter on those dates respectively.—tailors' c., a chair without legs, but having a back and a knee-rest: used on a bench or table to take the c., to undertake the duties of chairman or presiding officer.—whirling c., a chair made to revolve rapidly in which insane patients were formerly fastened in an attempt to subdue them.— Windsor c., a strong rail-back chair of the early part of the 18th century, usually of ash or of oak; popular in the American colonies.

Other compounds having chair as the first element are self-explaining; as, chair-arm, c-back, c-leg, etc.

chair'man, chair'men; 2 chār'man, n. [-MEN, pl.] 1. One who presides over an assembly or in the meeting of a corporation, company, committee, or the like. 2. One who wheels an invalid's chair; formerly, one of the carriers of a sedan chair.—chair'man-ship, n. The office of a chairman, or the discharge of its duties.

Chair-rō-nei-a, n. [Gr.] Same as CHERONEA.

chaise', 1 shēz; 2 chās, n. 1. A one-horse vehicle for two persons, with the body usually hung on long leather straps, having long elastic shafts, a calash top, and two high wheels. 2. Any light four-wheeled carriage, usually without a top, drawn by one or more horses: frequently with facing seats; as, a pony-chaise.

Very nice four-wheeled chaise, six—seats for two behind—one in front for the gentleman that drives.

DICKENS Pickwick Papers p. 37. [r. & w. 1867.]

3. A closed carriage used for traveling, having the driver seated on one of the horses; a post-chaise. [F. var. of chaise; see CHAIR, n.] chais'z—Boston chaise, a two-wheeled vehicle with chaise-like body hanging on leather braces attached to the shafts: invented by Chauncey Thomas, of Boston, Mass.

chance, 1 chans; 2 chānc, v. [CHANCED; CHANCING.]

I. t. 1. [Colloq.] To take the chance of; risk; hazard.

2. [Archaic.] To befall; happen to.

II. t. 1. To occur accidentally; happen; said of events and often preceded by it, in which case it is followed by that introducing a clause; as, unless rain chanced to fall; it chanced that tidings came.

This said affair had chanced about thirty years before the action of our story commences.

HAVERHORE House of Seven Gables ch. i, p. 27. [o. c. 1875.]

2. To come without previous purpose or design; said of persons, and followed by an infinitive or the preposition on or upon; as, he chanced to mention; he chanced upon a message in a book. chanceut. SYN. see HAPPEN—how chance? [Archaic], how chances it that? how is (was) it that?

chance, a. Occurring by chance; not prearranged; casual; as, a chance encounter; a chance acquaintance. SYN. see INCIDENTAL.

chance, n. 1. The unknown or undefined cause of events that to us are uncertain or not subject to calculation; luck; fortune; as, the market prices seem subject to chance.

There is a large amount of chance in the judgments which history ultimately forms of statesmen.

LEcky Eng. in the Eighteenth Cent. vol. vi, p. 60. [a. 1837.]

2. An unknown agency, independent of causation, that is assumed to account for unusual or unexplained events; absolute fortuity; also, the operation of this agency; accident apparently uncaused: often personified (or by the ancients) deified; as, some philosophers attribute the origin of the world to chance. Science and philosophy, as well as religion, assume the law of causation to be universal in its reach, and all men practically act upon the assumption of this law. Chance and accident as facts are thus excluded from the universe, except as the indeterminate operation of laws and causes.

We deny in history an atomistic conglomerate of chances, or the despotic rule of a mute fate.

MILLER Chips vol. ii, p. 5. [s. 1873.]

3. An event resulting from an assumed fortuitous agency; an accident; as, their meeting was a mere chance.

4. A favorable conjunction of circumstances more or less contingent; an opportunity; as, you have your chance to-day.

5. Undetermined probability in general; contingency; likelihood; as, there is some chance of his being elected.

6. Logic & Math. (1) One of several events of which some one must and only one is more likely to follow than any other; as, the toss of a die there is one chance in six that six will turn up; he has only one chance in a thousand of escaping. (2) Probability. See PROBABILITY.

7. Baseball. An opportunity for a player to make a play which counts as an error if not successful. [F., < LL. cadentia, < L. cado, ppr. cadent (-s), fall.] chanceut. SYN. see ACCIDENT; EVENT; HAZARD; OPPORTUNITY—Prep. a chance of success; a chance at the table; a chance for the prize; one chance in a thousand—absolute chance, same as def. 2.—by c., accidentally.—main c. [Colloq.], the direction in which success, advantage, or profit seems most readily attainable.

theory of chances, a theory which exhibits the nature and chances as equal possibilities, and which lays the foundation for the mathematical calculation of probability.—to take the chances, to accept the risks, as of a venture.—total chances (Baseball), in scoring, the number of chances had by a fielder during a definite period, from which his average is computed.

chan-coi, 1 chan-sel; 2 chān-cōi, n. Arch. 1. The space in a church reserved for the officiating clergy, often separated from the rest of the building by a screen or railing. (1) All beyond the nave and transepts; the choir.

Till that the bell of laudes 'gan to ring,

CHAUVER C. T., Miller's Tale l. 470.

(2) An enclosure beyond or within the choir, containing the altar; the sanctuary. (3) In churches other than the Roman Catholic and Anglican, a space raised off in front of the pulpit. 2. In ancient secular basilicas, a space raised off to separate the judges and council from the spectators. [OF., < LL. cancellus, < L. cancelli; see CANCELLA.] chan'cel'

the seal and the books, lectures on theology, and inspects schools.— c. of a diocese, the official adviser of a bishop in all matters concerning the civil and canon law, and his vicar-general. c. of the bishop.— C. of the Exchequer, the minister of finance in the British cabinet.— C. of the Order of the Garter, an officer who seals the commissions of the chapter and assembly of the Knights of the Garter, keeps the minutes of their proceedings, and delivers their acts under the seal of the order.— Lord C. of Ireland, an official performing in Ireland functions similar to those of the Lord Chancellor of England but not enjoying so high a rank.— Lord High C., in Great Britain, the highest judicial officer of the crown, the custodian of the great seal, charged with supervision of charters and other instruments. The Chancellor is ex officio a privy councillor and Speaker of the House of Lords, is a cabinet minister, and the highest civil subject outside of the royal family, and the highest of the law lords who decide appeal cases. He is a patron of many crown livings, official guardian of all infants, idiots, and lunatics, and appoints all justices of the peace. He presides over the Chancery Division of the Judicature and over the Court of Appeal. His jurisdiction extends over Great Britain and, in certain cases, over Ireland; but his purely judicial and administrative functions are confined to England and Wales. The office, anciently held invariably by an ecclesiastic of high rank, who was usually the chief adviser and official confessor of the sovereign, has since 1535 been held by laymen.— chan'cel-lor'lor'or-less, n.— chan'cel-lor'or-ship, n. The office or the term of office of a chancellor. chan'cel-or-at-let. Chan'cel-lors-vill, 1 chan's-larz-vil; 2 chān'cel-lor-vil, n. A village in Spotsylvania county, Va.; Lee defeated Hooker, May 14, 1863.

chan'ced'ly, 1 chāns'med'ly; 2 chāng'med'ly, n. 1. Law. Unpremeditated wounding or killing in self-defense in a casual affray; homicide upon a sudden encounter. The original phrase was chance-medley (chaude mesle), a killing in the heat of passion while in combat; but as chance grew obsolete chance was substituted, and came to imply killing in self-defense in a casual affray. In modern usage both have nearly the same meaning. 2. A haphazard combination or mixture. chan'cer-y, 1 chan'ser-y; 2 chān'cer-y, n. 1. [U. S.] A court of equity, as distinguished from a common-law court. The terms chancery and equity are commonly used as synonymous. In some of the States the equity jurisdiction is virtually identical with that of the English courts of chancery. In a few States the courts of chancery and equity are distinct. 2. [Eng.] (1) Previously to 1873, the court presided over by the Lord High Chancellor of England, the highest court next to the House of Lords. (2) Since the judicature act of 1873, one of the five divisions of the High Court of Justice.

The Court of Chancery, which was developed subsequently to the establishment of the English courts of law, dates back to the reign of Edward the Confessor, and was so called because it was presided over by the Lord Chancellor. In the early days of the common law, all petitions addressed to the king passed through the chancellor's hands, and in time these became so numerous that in 1280 under Edward I. an ordinance was issued empowering the chancellor to deal with most of them. Later, in the reign of Edward III., matters which were of grace were referred directly to the chancellor for settlement and thus the practice of obtaining relief in this manner assumed the character of a judicial proceeding, and the chancellor's office, or chancery, became known as the Court of the Chancellor or the Court of Chancery.

3. [Scott.] An office in the General Register House, Edinburgh (formerly called Chancery), in which is kept a record of writs, crown charters, etc. [M.] 4. A court of records; archives. 5. See CHANCELLERY, 2 and 3. 6. Chanceryship. 7. A treasury. [F. chancellerie, < LL. cancellaria, < cancellarius; see CHANCELLOR.]— In chancery, 1. Pending in a court of chancery. 2. [Slang.] (1) In a hopeless predicament. (2) In boxing, said of the head caught and securely held under the arm of an opponent.

When I can perform my mile in eight minutes or a little less, then I feel as if I had old Time's head in chancery.

2. To exchange for something else; replace by substitution; as, to change horses; to change one's dress.

3. To give, or cause another to give, the equivalent of in smaller parts; said of money; as, to change a dollar.

4. To give and take in exchange; exchange or interchange; displaced by exchange, and archaic or dialectical except in certain phrases; as, to change places. 5. [Colloq.] To cause to deteriorate; sour; as, the thunderstorm changed the milk.

II. 1. To become of different appearance, form, character, or condition; as, to change for the worse. 2. To enter upon a new phase; as, the moon has changed. 3. To make a change or an exchange. 4. [Colloq.] To transfer from one train to another. 5. [Colloq.] To take off a garment and put on another. 6. To turn red or white in the face. [OF. changer, < LL. cambio, exchange.] changeur.

Syn. alter, commute, convert, diversify, exchange, metamorphose, modify, qualify, shift, transfigure, transform, transmute, vary. To change is distinctively to make a thing other than it has been, in some respect at least; to exchange is to put or take something else in its place; to alter is ordinarily to change partially, to make different in one or more particulars. To exchange is often to transfer ownership; as, to exchange city for country property. Change is often used in the sense of exchange; as, to change horses. To transmute is to change the qualities while the substance remains the same; as, to transmute the baser metals into gold. To transform is to change form or appearance, with or without deeper and more essential change; it is less absolute than transmute, the sometimes used for that word, and is often used in a spiritual sense as transmute could not be: "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Rom. xii. 2. Transfigure is, as in its Scriptural use, to change in an exalted and glorious spiritual way; "Jesus . . . was transfigured before them, and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." Matt. xvii. 1, 2. To metamorphose is to make some remarkable change, ordinarily in external qualities, but often in structure, use, or chemical constitution, as of a caterpillar into a butterfly, of the stems of a plant into petals, or of the crystalline structure of rocks, hence called "metamorphic rocks," as when a limestone is metamorphosed into a marble. To vary is to change from time to time, often capriciously. To commute is to put something easier, lighter, milder, or in some way more favorable in place of that which is commuted; as, to commute capital punishment to imprisonment for life; to commute daily fares on a railway to a monthly payment. To convert (L. con, with, and verto, turn) is to primarily turn about, and signifies to change in form, character, use, etc., through a wide range of relations; iron is converted into steel, joy into grief, a sinner into a saint. To turn is a popular word for change in any sense short of the meaning of exchange, being often equivalent to alter, convert, transform, transmute, etc. We modify or qualify a statement which might seem too strong; we modify it by some limitation, qualify it by some addition. — Ant: abide, bide, continue, endure, hold, keep, persist, remain, retain, stay. — Prep: to change a home toilet for a street dress; to change from a caterpillar to or into a butterfly; to change clothes with a beggar; to change about. — To leave one's party or side, and join another. 2. To be inconstant or fickle. — To c. a horse (Manège) to turn a horse's head from one side to the other. — To c. hand; — To c. arms, to shift the musket or rifle from one shoulder to the other. — To c. color, to blush; sometimes, to turn pale. — To c. front. 1. Mil. To face a different way; alter the direction of a line of attack or defense. 2. Figuratively, to alter one's attitude on a subject or question. — To c. hands, to pass into a new ownership; change owners. — To c. one's mind, to alter one's opinion or purpose. — To c. one's note or tune [Colloq.], to alter one's manner of speaking. — To c. sides, to desert one's party.

change, n. 1. An alteration, variation, or transition, in any respect, whether of condition, form, order, or relation; vicissitude; as, a change of circumstances; a change in voice, manner, or occupation.

The progress of a nation from barbarism to civilization produces a change similar to that which takes place during the progress of an individual from infancy to mature age.

MACAULAY Essays, Dryden p. 38. [F. & A. co. 1854.]

2. A substitution, succession, or supplanting of one thing by another of the same general kind; as, a change of rulers, or of seasons. 3. That which is used in the substitution; as, a change of clothes. 4. The money due to a purchaser who gives a bill or coin of greater value than his purchase, and therefore returned to him. 5. Money of smaller denominations given in exchange for larger; small coins collectively. 6. A passage from one phase to another; as, the change of the moon. 7. Any one of the possible arrangements of a series; permutation; as, the changes of the letters of the word 'love' are 24; the changes in a peal of bells. 8. A place for general transaction of business between merchants, bankers, or brokers. See EXCHANGE.

Mighty in ledgers and great upon 'Change. HARRIET B. STOWS Pearl of Orr's Island p. 202. [H. & A. co. 1886.]

9. Metaph. Any alteration, succession, beginning, or termination; one of the ultimate modes of being or fact, immediately connected with action and distinguished from substance and power in being transitory. 10. [Scott.] An ale-house, or house of refreshment.

change-house, n. 11. Mus. Modulation or variation of key. 12. Want of constancy; caprice. 13. Ex-change. [OF. < LL. cambium, exchange.] change'.

Syn: innovation, mutation, novelty, revolution, translation, variation, variety, vicissitude. See CONVERSION.

A change is a passing from one state or form to another, any act or process by which a thing becomes unlike what it was before, or the unlikeness so produced; we say a change was taking place, or the change that had taken place was manifest. Mutation is a more formal word for change, often suggesting repeated or continual change; as, the mutations of fortune. Novelty is a change to what is new, or the newness of that to which a change is made; as, he was perpetually desirous of novelty. Revolution is specifically and most commonly a change of government. Variation is a partial change in form, qualities, etc., but especially in position or action; as, the variation of the magnetic needle or of the pulse. Variety is a succession of changes or an intermixture of different things, and is always thought of as agreeable. Vicissitude is ship, sudden, or violent change, always thought of as surprising and often as disturbing or distressing; as, the vicissitudes of politics. Transition is change by passing from one place or state to another, especially in a natural, regular, or orderly way; as, the transition from spring to summer, or from youth to manhood. An innovation is a change that breaks in upon an established order or custom; as, an innovation in religion or politics. For the distinctions between the other words compare the synonyms for CHANGE, v. — Prep: change of parties; change in temperature; change from heat to cold; of water into wine.

— Book of Changes, one of the five Chinese classics said to have been written by Wan Wang in the 12th century B. C. Its commentaries are ascribed to Confucius.— change', key, n. A key capable of opening a single lock of a set.— c. of day line, same as DATE-LINE.— c. of life, the cessation of the menses and of the power of child-bearing in women. cli-mac'ter-let; men'o-pause; turn of life.— c. of voice, the gradual change in the pitch and quality of boys' voices occurring about the age of puberty.— c. pocket, n. An outer pocket of a garment for small coins, easily accessible to thumb and finger.— c. point, n. Kinematics. In any mechanism, a position in which, owing to momentary removal of pressure, the mechanism is resolved into two or more elements, or modified into a different and essentially simpler form.— c. ratio, n. Math. A multiplier by which to change a ratio from one unit (of anything, as velocity) to another; the number of the new units (of velocity) equivalent to one of the old units; as, the change-ratio for changing velocity expressed in miles per day to one expressed in feet per minute.— c. speed, n. See CHANGE-SPEED GEAR, under GEAR, n. — on 'change (Com.), specif., in London usage, on the foreign exchange market; by extension, and loosely, on the stock exchange.— second-ary c. (Biol.), a cenogenetic change in life-history as opposed to paleogenetic or anagenetic modifications.— To give c. to [Slang, Eng.] to render a service to; sometimes used ironically.— to ring the changes. 1. To operate a chime of bells so as to produce a variety of tuneful combinations. 2. To repeat something with every possible variety of language and illustration. 3. [Slang, Eng.] To palm off bad coin for good, as in giving change.— to take c. out of [Slang, Eng.], to get even with; get an advantage over; generally used negatively.

change'a-ble, 1 chēn'ā-bl; 2 chāng'ā-bl, a. 1. Capable of being changed; alterable; as, a changeable arrangement. 2. check'er, 1 check'er; 2 chék'er, v. 1. To mark, decorate, or arrange with squares or crossed lines; streak. 2. To fill with variations or vicissitudes; diversify. chequer. check'er, n. 1. One of the pieces used in a game of draughts, usually a small disk. 2. One of the squares or spots in a checker-board or other checked surface; asquare in a mosaic or architectural design. 3. pl. The game of draughts; the more familiar name in the United States. It is played with 24 pieces, 12 on each side, arranged and moved upon a board divided into 64 squares. The object of the game and the aim of each player are to capture all his opponent's pieces by moving over each with an adjacent one of his own into an opposite vacant square, or so to block them with his own that they can not be moved. If a player neglects to take an opposing piece when in a position to do so, his adversary has the option of compelling him to take it, or removing from the board the piece that should have jumped, or of allowing the play to stand. When a piece reaches the last row on the opponent's side of the board, it becomes a king, and can be moved either forward or backward. The position of the board and pieces at the commencement of the game is shown in the illustration. The black squares, on which the plays are made, are numbered from 1 to 32, as indicated, the numbers always commencing at the side of the board occupied by the black men. The moves are indicated as follows: 14-18, a move from square 14 to square 18; 9-18, a jump from square 9 to square 18, involving the capture of an opposing piece; 16-30, a double jump, with the capture of two opposing pieces, etc.

Checker-board, after black's third move. Laird and Lady opening.

The following are the best-known checker openings, the moves of the two players being given alternately in each case. (1) Alma. 11-15, 23-19, 8-11, 22-17, 3-8. (2) Ayrshire Lassie. 11-15, 23-19, 8-11, 22-17, 3-8. (3) Bristol. 11-15, 23-19, 8-11, 22-17, 3-8. (4) Cross. 11-15, 23-19, 8-11, 22-17, 3-8. (5) Defiance. 11-15, 23-19, 8-11, 22-17, 3-8. (6) Dyke. 11-15, 22-17, 15-9. (7) Fife. 11-15, 23-19, 8-11, 22-17, 3-8. (8) Glasgow. 11-15, 23-19, 8-11, 22-17, 11-16. (9) Kelso Cross. 10-15, 23-18. single atom of the element. (See table under ELEMENT.) When more than one atom is to be represented, figures are placed to the right of the symbol either above or below the line; thus, O<sub>4</sub> or O<sub>2</sub>. A molecule representing a compound is indicated by a series of such symbols called a formula; thus, alcohol has for its formula C<sub>2</sub>H<sub>5</sub>O, which shows that a molecule of this substance contains two atoms of carbon, six of hydrogen, and one of oxygen. To indicate more than one molecule, various exponents are used; thus, each of the groups of symbols 2HCl, 2(HCl), and (HCl)<sub>2</sub> stands for two molecules of hydrochloric acid.

The atoms of a group within a molecule are frequently separated from others by means of periods or commas, especially in complex formulas; thus, alcohol may be represented as C<sub>2</sub>H<sub>5</sub>.HO or C<sub>2</sub>H<sub>5</sub>.HO, instead of C<sub>2</sub>H<sub>5</sub>O, and the formula of sulfuric acid was formerly written H<sub>2</sub>O.S<sub>2</sub>O<sub>3</sub> or SO<sub>3</sub>.H<sub>2</sub>O, instead of H<sub>2</sub>SO<sub>4</sub>.

In chemical reactions, the signs + (plus) and - (minus) are used to show that the formulas so connected are necessary to produce a desired reaction, and the results are usually shown as immediately following the sign = (equals), indicating that the original groups have reacted to produce a new compound; thus, the action of sulfuric acid on zinc, formerly indicated by the symbols Zn + SO<sub>3</sub>.H<sub>2</sub>O = ZnO.S<sub>2</sub>O<sub>3</sub> + H<sub>2</sub>, and now by Zn + H<sub>2</sub>SO<sub>4</sub> = ZnSO<sub>4</sub> + H<sub>2</sub>, shows in the latter case that one molecule of sulfuric acid acting on one molecule of zinc yields one molecule of zinc sulfate and one of hydrogen.

Valence, or combining power, may be represented by prime-marks or Roman numerals; thus, Ca<sup>II</sup> or Ca<sup>II</sup> shows that calcium is bivalent; Bi<sup>III</sup> or Bi<sup>III</sup> that bismuth is trivalent. In graphic formulas straight dashes, each of which signifies a single unit of affinity, and which, when they connect two symbols, are called bonds, serve to indicate chemical union or saturation; thus, H — indicates univalent hydrogen, O —, — O —, or O = indicates bivalent oxygen, Bi ≡ indicates trivalent bismuth, and so on. (The position of the lines is determined merely by convenience.) By means of these graphic formulas the constitution of very complex bodies may be expressed, especially in organic chemistry;

thus, methane, or marsh-gas, CH<sub>4</sub>, or C — H is frequently
— H

H represented H — C — H, and any one or more of the four hydrogen atoms may be substituted by a monovalent atom
H
H
or group; thus, Cl — C — Cl or CH<sub>3</sub>.Cl<sub>3</sub> represents chloro-Cl
form. The so-called benzene ring,

H
H — C — C — H

sometimes condensed into , represents C<sub>6</sub>H<sub>6</sub>. Correspondingly, in this any one of the hydrogen atoms may be substituted by a monovalent group, or two hydrogen atoms by a bivalent group, etc.; thus,

NH<sub>2</sub>

is C<sub>6</sub>H<sub>5</sub>(NH<sub>2</sub>), amidobenzene, or aniline.

In thermochemistry a superior c (c), signifying calories, is used in exothermic reactions, to represent the heat-units evolved in the combination of the elements; thus, H<sub>2</sub> + O = H<sub>2</sub>O + 59258c. When the reaction is endothermic, a minus-sign is used before the number of calories, thus, C + H + N = CNH — 37700c.

chem'ist-type, 1 kem'ist-tp; 2 cēm'ist-tp, n. 1. A process for producing maps, etc., by means of chemical reagents, by etching lines in a zinc plate, filling them with fusible metal, and then eating away the zinc with acid, leaving the lines in relief. 2. The relief plate so obtained. [<chem'ist (IN CHEMICAL) + TYPE.] — chem'ist-type, n.

Chem'nitz, 1 kem'nits; 2 cēm'nits, n. 1. Martin (1†, 1522-/1556), a German Protestant divine; his confession of faith adopted in Saxony, 1571. 2. A manufacturing town in Saxony, Germany.

chem'o-cen'trum, 1 kem'o-sen'trom; 2 cēm'o-çēn'trūm, n. [-TRĀ, pl.] Cytol. A nucleus which is assumed to be the center governing chemical phenomena which take place in a living cell. [<CHEMIC + CENTER.]

chem'o-cep'tors, 1 kem'o-sep'terz; 2 cēm'o-çēp'tōrz, n. pl. Psychophys. End-organs or receptors of sense which are excited by chemical stimuli, such as the taste-buds, or the rods and cones of the retina, the latter by photochemical changes.

chem'o-reflex, 1 kem'o-rifleks; 2 cēm'o-rēfleks'is, a. Physiol. Pertaining to a reflex action produced by a chemical stimulus. [<CHEMIC + REFLEX.]

chem'osed, 1 kem'ost; 2 cēm'ost, a. Having marks of chemosis.

Chem'osh, 1 kī'mosh; 2 cēm'osh, n. Bib. The god of the Moabites to whom living persons were sacrificed. Num. xxi, 29.

chem'o'sis, 1 kī-mō'sis; 2 cēm'o'sis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the conjunctiva of the eye, with infiltration of fluid into the underlying tissue, whereby the conjunctiva is raised above the cornea. [Gr. chemōsis, < chemē, cockle-shell. chym'o'sis.] chem'os-mo'sis, 1 kem'os-mō'sis; 2 cēm'os-mō'sis, n. Chemical action transmitted through a membrane, such as parchment; chemical osmosis. [Gr. chemōsis, < chemē, cockle-shell. chym'o'sis.] chem'o-syn'the-sis, 1 kem'o-syn'thi-sis; 2 cēm'o-syn'the-sis, n. Plant-physiol. Synthesis of organic compounds from inorganic constituents without the aid of light. See SYNTHESIS. [Gr. chemōsis, < chemē, cockle-shell. chym'o'sis.] chem'o-tac'tism, 1 kem'o-tak'tizm; 2 cēm'o-tac'tizm, n. Same as CHEMOTAXIS.

chem'o-tax'ic, 1 kem'o-taks'ik; 2 cēm'o-taks'ic, a. Chemotactic; erroneous form.

chem'o-tax'is, 1 kem'o-taks'is; 2 cēm'o-taks'is, n. The property which certain motile living cells possess of approaching (positive chemotaxis) or moving away from (negative chemotaxis) chemical substances of various kinds. Chemotaxis seems to play an important part in some phases of inflammation. Thus it appears to be, in part at least, through the incitement of chemotaxis, by the chemical substances which they contain or eliminate, that bacteria act in inducing suppuration. [Gr. chemōsis, < chemē, cockle-shell. chym'o'sis.] chem'o-tic'al-ly, ad. [Gr. chemōsis, < chemē, cockle-shell. chym'o'sis.] chem'o-ther'a-py, 1 kem'o-ther'a-pi; 2 cēm'o-ther'a-py, n. The treatment of internal microbial diseases by injecting into the blood chemical substances that destroy the parasitic germs, but are not poisonous to the human tissues. The principle is the same as that of serum-therapy, but the material injected is a synthetic chemical compound, not a product of a living organism. Syphilis has been successfully treated by this method. See SANATION.

chem'o-tic, 1 kī-mō'tic; 2 cēm'o'tic, a. Relating to or indicating chemosis.

chem'o-tro-pism, 1 kī-mō'tro-pizm; 2 cēm'o-tro-pizm, n. Same as CHEMOTAXIS. [Gr. chemōsis, < chemē, cockle-shell. chym'o'sis.]

chem'o-trop'ic, 1 kī-mō'trop'ik; 2 cēm'o-trop'ik, ad. [Gr. chemōsis, < chemē, cockle-shell. chym'o'sis.]

Chem'mung, 1 shi-mung; 2 che-mung, n. 1. A river in Steuben county, N. Y.; 50 m. long to Susquehanna river. 2. A county in New York; 394 sq. m.; county-seat, Elmira. 3. Geol. Name of certain strata. See GEOLOGY.

che'na, 1 chī'na; 2 chē'na, n. [Ind.] A large ophiophagous fish of India (Ophiophagus striatus).

che'na, 1 chī'na; 2 chē'na, n. [Ind.] Bot. Either of two kinds of millet, Panicum piliolum and P. miliaceum. [Ind.] che-na, 1 chī'na; 2 chē'na, n. Bib. 1 Chron. 2 Chron. 1 chī'na; 2 chē'na, n. A river in Kashmir and Punjab, India; 800 m. long to Indus river.

che-nam, 1 chī'nam; 2 chē'nam, n. Same as CHUNAM.

che-nan-go, 1 shi-nan-go; 2 che-nan-go, n. 1. A river in Chenango and Broome counties, N. Y.; 100 m. long to Susquehanna river. 2. A county in New York; 847 sq. m.; county-seat, Norwich.

che-na-ni, 1 kī-nē-ni; 2 cē-nē-ni, n. Bib. 1 Chron. 2 Chron. 1 chī'na; 2 chē'na, n. A river in Kashmir and Punjab, India; 800 m. long to Indus river.

che-na, 1 chī'na; 2 chē'na, n. Bib. 1 Chron. 2 Chron. 1 chī'na; 2 chē'na, n. A river in Kashmir and Punjab, India; 800 m. long to Indus river.

che-ne, 1 shēn; 2 chēn, n. [F.] Literally, oak or oak-tree; in dress-goods, a printed or stamped design of an oak-leaf pattern, as on cloth.

chen'er-y, 1 chen'er-i; 2 chēn'er-y, Thomas (1826-1911) 1884). A British journalist and Orientalist; Old Testament reviser.

chen'e-ris-ite, 1 shēn'vīks-it; 2 chēn'e-ris-ite, n. Mineral. A massive, vitreous, dark-green hydrous arsenate (Cu<sub>2</sub>(FeO<sub>4</sub>·As<sub>2</sub>O<sub>4</sub>·3H<sub>2</sub>O). [Chen'er, Irish chemist.] cheng, 1 chēng; 2 chēng, n. The Chinese organ. See BANG.

Chen'gal-pat, n. Same as CHINGPAT.

Cheng'ju, 1 chēng'ju; 2 chēng'ju, n. The capital of Chunehong, Fuku province, S. China.

Cheng'teh, 1 chēng'teh; 2 chēng'teh, n. A city in Chihli province, China; 100 m. N. E. of Peking.

Cheng'ui, 1 chēng'ui; 2 chēng'ui, n. A walled city on the Min river; capital of Szechwan province, China.

Ching'ui, 1 chēng'ui; 2 chēng'ui, n. A walled city on the Min river; capital of Szechwan province, China.

Chē'ner, 1 shē'ner; 2 chē'ner, n. 1. André Marie de (1742-1794), a French poet; guillotined; Poems, 1819. 2. Marie Joseph (1742-1794), a French poet and dramatic brother of preceding; Charles IX., a French play.

che-nile, 1 shi-nile; 2 che-nile, n. 1. A soft tufted or fluffy cord of cotton, wool, silk, or worsted, made by weaving four warp-threads or crossing three warp-threads about soft filling-threads, that are afterward cut; made into trimmings, fringes, etc., and woven into curtains, table-covers, and rugs. The warp is generally cotton, the filling of cotton, wool, etc. 2. A floridous alga (Dasya elegans). 3. [So. U. S.] The caterpillar of a noctuid moth (Alabama or Aletia argillacea) destructive to the cotton-plant. [leaf-scatterer]

chess, 1 ches; 2 chē, n. A game played by two or more persons on a checkerboard divided into 64 squares alternately light and dark, with 16 men or pieces on each side, arranged at the beginning as shown in the illustration. The term piece in its restricted sense designates each of the eight men in the first row, namely, a king, a queen, two bishops, two *knight*s, and two castles or rooks, of which the king, queen, and castle are known as major pieces and the bishop and knight as minor pieces. The second row contains eight pawns. The opposing pieces are distinguished by their color, those on one side being white and those on the other either black or red, now usually the former. The rows of squares running perpendicularly, or from one player toward the other as they sit at the board, are termed files, those running horizontally, rows. The squares are numbered from the players along the files, those in each file taking the name of the major piece occupying the first square; thus, the square on which the king stands is called the king's square, the next in front king's 2, the next king's 3, and so on. As the board is numbered from one side for one player and from the other side for the other, it will be noted that black king's 6 will be the white king's 4, and so on. The values of the pieces are graded according to their mobility, which is the measure of their power for attack or defense, the queen being the most powerful, the rook next, etc. The aim of each player is to checkmate the opponent's king.

At the beginning of a game each major piece has a pawn on the square immediately in front of it, as shown by the abbreviations in the illustration, such pawn being known by the name of that piece before which it is set, as queen's rook's pawn. The major pieces themselves, when in play, are known from the side of the board on which they originally stood, as king's rook, queen's bishop, etc. To commence a game the pieces must be moved alternately, white always moving first save when the odds of a pawn are given. Certain initiative moves and replies have been analyzed and classified. See list of openings below. For the moves, see the names of pieces in the vocabulary, also CHECK, CHECKMATE, and KNIGHT'S TOUR. Chess is one of the few games of pure skill. It is played in one form or another in all parts of the civilized world, and comes down from so great antiquity that its origin is lost in obscurity. It was known in the Orient for centuries before it penetrated to Europe.

They dance, and they play at chess and tables.
 CHAUCER C. T. Franklin's Tale l. 172.

The following system of notation is used for the purpose of recording games as played between experts and also for the setting forth and solution of chess problems. Compare NOTATION, n.

B = bishop. K = king. Kt = knight. R = rook (castle). Q = queen. P = pawn. e. p. = en passant. ch = check. x = takes. O-O = castles on the king's side. O-O-O = castles on the queen's side. sq. = square. - = to; as, P-K4 = pawn to king's 4. S = knight in some systems, being taken from the German springer.

The body rejects all creeds, accepts the Bible, insists upon a fellowship as inclusive as the Universal Church of Christ, and prefers to use the name Christian to the exclusion of all party names. Compare DISCIPLES OF CHRIST, under DISCIPLE.—C. era, the period beginning January 1, 754 A. U. C., or nine months and seven days after March 25, 753 A. U. C., the date of the incarnation of Christ as calculated by Dionysius Exiguus in 527. Previously the years were distinguished by their number in the cycle of indiction. The new Dionysian year began on March 25, and was adopted in many countries; some chronicles, while adopting the new era, preferred to have the year coincide with the Roman Civil year, which began on January 1; hence the double chronology which existed down to the acceptance of the Gregorian calendar. In England the year began on March 25, and during the 17th and 18th centuries it was not uncommon to employ double dates for events between December 25 and March 25, as February 14, 1609/10. See CALENDAR; ERA. The actual year of the birth of Christ is now placed by scholars as far back as 6 or 7 B. C.—*C. intervals.—Le Boulengé c., an electrical device which records the distance a rod falls while a projectile is passing between two stated points, whereby, by computing the time in accordance with the laws of falling bodies, the required velocity of the projectile is ascertained; named for P. E. Le Boulouge of the Belgian artillery service.

Chronograph.

b, binding; c, screws; c, carriage; cw, clockwork; f, fountain pen automatically recording the seconds; g, governor; n, battery wires.

— chro-nog-ra-pher, n. A chronicle; also, one who is a chronologist. — chro-nog-raph-ic, a. 1. Belonging to the chronograph, or characterized by its use. 2. Chronogrammatic. — chro-nog-raph-i-cal, a. Describing in the order of time; chronological. — chro-nog-raph-y, n. 1. The chronological investigation and determination of past events. 2. [Rare.] The making of chronograms. 3. The graphic method applied to the measuring of the time-intervals of successive rapid motions; the use of chronographs. 4. Chronology.

chro-nol-o-gy, n. 1. A science that treats of computation of time, or of investigation and arrangement of events in the order of time. 2. [Rare.] The making of chronograms. 3. The graphic method applied to the measuring of the time-intervals of successive rapid motions; the use of chronographs. 4. Chronology.

chro-nol-o-gy, n. 1. A science that treats of computation of time, or of investigation and arrangement of events in the order of time. 2. [Rare.] The making of chronograms. 3. The graphic method applied to the measuring of the time-intervals of successive rapid motions; the use of chronographs. 4. Chronology.

chro-nol-o-gy, n. 1. A science that treats of computation of time, or of investigation and arrangement of events in the order of time. 2. [Rare.] The making of chronograms. 3. The graphic method applied to the measuring of the time-intervals of successive rapid motions; the use of chronographs. 4. Chronology.

History is not a mere succession of events connected only by chronology. It is a chain of causes and effects.

LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. i, p. 332. [A. 1886.]

2. Any particular chronological system; as, the Hebrew chronology. 3. A list or table of events in the order of time. [CHRONO + -LOGY] — astronomical chronology, chronology as related to or guided by celestial motions and phenomena. — chro-nol-o-gy, n. Pertaining to or occupied with chronology; following the order of time. — chro-nol-o-gy, n. [CHRONO + -LOGY] 1. To arrange in the order of time. 2. To record.

chro-nom-e-ter, 1 kro-nom'e-ter; 2 cro-nom'e-ter, n. 1. A portable timekeeper of the highest attainable precision. It is rendered independent of variations in temperature by a compensation balance-wheel, and has an especially delicate and effective escapement. 2. To record.

Our watches we correct by the chronometer, and the chronometer must be regulated by the sun.

A. T. PIERSON Many Infallible Proofs p. 145. [r. n. a. 1886.]

2. Same as METRONOME. [CHRONO + -METER.]

— chronometer tables, tables available for any latitude, which facilitate chronometric correction from an observation of the sun's altitude. — D'Arsonval's, a portable clockwork arrangement with a single dial, recording time in units of 1/100 second; controlled in its movements by an electromagnet. — hack c. (Naut.), an inferior chronometer for taking observations, compared later with standard chronometer. — Jacquet's recording c. a stop-watch with a mechanical or an electric controlling apparatus capable of recording a second or one-fifth of a second on the revolving surface of a kymograph. — marine c., an accurate timekeeper used to determine a ship's longitude. It hangs horizontally in gimbals, and beats half-seconds. — solar c., a sun-dial for showing solar time. — chro-nom-e-ter, a. Belonging to chronometry; pertaining to or determined by the chronometer. — chro-nom-e-ter, n. [CHRONO + -METER] 1. A portable timekeeper of the highest attainable precision. It is rendered independent of variations in temperature by a compensation balance-wheel, and has an especially delicate and effective escapement. 2. To record.

chro-nom-e-try, 1 kro-nom'e-try; 2 cro-nom'e-try, n. The measurement of time; also, the science or method of measuring time.

God has so arranged the chronometry of our spirits that there shall be thousands of silent moments. MARTINEAU Hours of Thought, Tides of the Spirit p. 12. [n. bro. 1882.]

chro-nom-o-my, 1 kro-nom'o-my; 2 cro-nom'o-my, n. [Rare.] A mode of calculating or measuring time. [CHRONO + -MOS, law.]

chro-n-o-pher, 1 kro-n'o-fer; 2 crön'o-fer, n. An instrument which is used for conveying time-indications to distant points by electricity. [CHRONO + Gr. pherō, bear.]

chro-n-o-pho-to-graph, 1 kro-n'o-fō-to-graf; 2 crön'o-fō-to-graf, n. 1. A single photograph of a series taken at equal intervals on a moving sensitized surface, or a series of such photographs, as for exhibition in a kinematograph or for use in a scientific investigation of a moving object. 2. An apparatus for obtaining such pictures. — chro-n-o-pho-to-gra-m, — chro-n-o-pho-to-graph-ic, a. — chro-n-o-pho-to-gra-phy, n. — chro-n-o-scope, 1 kro-n'o-skop; 2 crön'o-skop, n. 1. A chronograph or other instrument for measuring a minute interval of time, as by a revolving indicator; often used for measuring the velocity of a shot, which is determined by the time it takes to pass between two screens, at each of which it breaks an electric circuit; also, for measuring the time of reaction in psychophysical experiments. 2. A form of clock which indicates the time by figures shown through holes in the dial. [CHRONO + -SCOPE] — chro-n-o-scop-ic, a. — chro-n-o-scop-i-cal-ly, adv. — chro-nos-co-py, n. The art or process of using a chronoscope. — gravity chronoscope, an electrified apparatus for recording time by means of a plate moving downward between posts. The falling plate breaks an electric circuit but recompletes it as it continues its downward motion; used in psychophysics. — Hipp c., a clock whose hands are connected or disconnected with the actuating mechanism by means of an electric circuit; used for measuring reaction times. — Münsterberg's c. (Psychophysics), an apparatus capable of recording the one hundredth part of a second and controlled by the same mechanism as the ordinary stop-watch, and operated without electricity. — pendulum c., an apparatus for marking time, in which a pendulum adapted to swing along a scale is released when a stimulus is given by the breaking of an electric circuit and a pointer is attracted to the scale by an electromagnet when the subject reacts. — Vernier c., an apparatus for measuring the time of reaction to given stimuli. It consists of two pendulums, each connected with a key. The release of one followed by the release of the other in response to a clicking sound made by the key of the first will record reaction-time in units of 1/50 second each.

chro-nos-ti-c-o-n, 1 kro-nos'ti-on; 2 ero-nos'ti-on, n. [TE + ph] The human temporal bone, as made up of distinct bones. [CHRONO + Gr. estion, bone.] — chro-nos-ti-c-al, a.

chro-nos-ti-chon, 1 kro-nos'ti-ken; 2 ero-nos'ti-on, n. A line of poetry containing a chronogram. [CHRONO + Gr. stichos, line of poetry.]

chro-n-o-ther-mal, 1 kro-n'o-thēr-mal; 2 crön'o-thēr-mal, a. Of or pertaining to both time and temperature.

chro-n-o-ther-mom-e-ter, 1 kro-n'o-thēr-mem'i-ter; 2 crön'o-thēr-mom'e-ter, n. 1. A thermometer with an anti-compensated or uncompensated balance-wheel, by the use of which mean temperature is determined. 2. An instrument for heating oil at a given rate per minute.

chro-nō-tro-pism, 1 kro-nō'tro-plzm; 2 ero-nō'tro-pism, n. Any disturbance of or interference with valvular action, as the cardiac pulsation. [CHRONO + Gr. tropos, turn.]

Chro-n, Sax., abbr. See ABBREVIATION.

Chro-coc-cæ, 1 kro-kō-ke-si-i; 2 crō-o-cō-cē-cē, n. pl. Bot. A family of undulular blue-green alga found in fresh or salt water. The cells are non-nuclear, and these alga are ranked among the lowest forms of vegetable life.

Chro-coc-cæ, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chroa, color, + kokkos, berry.] — chro-coc-cæ-cotus, a.

Chro-sper-ma, 1 kro-spēr-ma; 2 cro-spēr-ma, n. Bot. A monotypic genus of herbs of the family Melastomaceæ. Its one species, C. muscatellum, has long been known as Amantium muscatellum. See FLY-POISON, 2, under FLY. [Gr. chros, surface, color, + sperma, seed.]

chro-ta, 1 hrō'ta; 2 hrō'ta, n. A six-stringed instrument of the viol type, a development of the crowd. The instrument was played with a bow, but two strings running free from the finger-board were played by plucking. In Italy the rim (a) was discarded, leaving the finger-board running free, and it became known as the rotta, from which (and the German form, the rota) the modern violin is descended.

Chru-dim, 1 krū'dim; 2 crū'dim, n. 1. A district in Bohemia. 2. Its capital.

chrys'a-lid, 1 kris'a-lid; 2 kris'a-lid, n. I. a. Of, pertaining to, or like a chrysalis. — chrys'a-lid.

chrys'a-lid, 1 kris'a-lid; 2 kris'a-lid, n. I. a. Of, pertaining to, or like a chrysalis. — chrys'a-lid.

of showy reddish, white, or yellow flowers. 2. [c-] A plant or flower of this genus. The chrysanthemums of cultivation are derived mostly from C. sinense or indicum. [L., < Gr. chrysanthemon, < chrysol, gold, + anthemon, flower.] — chrys-an-them-u-m, a. phib, n. An insect (Macrostiphum chrysanthemula) infesting chrysanthemums. — c-fly, n. The drone-fly.

chrys-an-thous, 1 kris-an-thus; 2 kris-an-thūs, a. Bot. Yellow-flowered. [CHRY + Gr. anthos, flower.] chrys-an-them, n.

Chry-sa-or, 1 kral-sē-or or kris'i-or; 2 kris-sā-or or kris-sā-or, n. Gr. Myth. 1. Poseidon's son, who sprang from the trunk of Medusa after her decapitation by Perseus. He married Callirhoe, and to them were born Echidna and Geryon. 2. The third of Arctical.

Chry-sa-o-ra, 1 kris-sā-o-rā; 2 kris-sā-o-rā, n. A genus of Medusæ of the family Pelagiada, which according to Hæckel formed a transitional stage between Pelagia and Dactylometra. [Gr. chrysaoros, with golden sword, < chrysol, gold, + aor, sword.]

chrys-a-ro-bin, 1 kris-sā-rō-bin; 2 kris-sā-rō-bin, n. 1. Goa powder. See POWDER. 2. An orange-yellow compound which forms the essential principle of Goa powder, and from which chrysanthemic acid is derived. [CHRY + Braz. Indian araroba, back.] chrys-a-ro-bi-num.

chrys-a-trop-ic, 1 kris-sā-trop'ik; 2 kris-sā-trop'ic, a. Designating a product of the plant Atropa belladonna; as, chrysanthropic acid (C<sub>11</sub>H<sub>15</sub>O<sub>4</sub>), scopoletin. [CHRY + ATROPIS.]

chrys-sau-rin, 1 kris-sē-rin; 2 kris-sē-rin, n. Chem. A reddish-yellow coal-tar color. [CHRY + L. aurum, gold.] chrys-sau-rin.

chrys-a-zin, 1 kris-sā-zin; 2 kris-sā-zin, n. Chem. A diacid of anthraquinone. [Gr. chrysa, gold, + zōn, beltless.]

chrys-e-an, 1 kris-sē-an; 2 kris-sē-an, n. Chem. A compound (C<sub>12</sub>H<sub>11</sub>N<sub>3</sub>O<sub>5</sub>) obtained as shining yellow crystals by passing hydrogen-sulfid gas through a strong solution of potassium cyanid. [Gr. chryseos, golden.]

chrys-e-in, 1 kris-sē-in; 2 kris-sē-in, n. Chem. A reddish-yellow color characteristic of an acid (NO<sub>2</sub>C<sub>10</sub>H<sub>7</sub>O<sub>3</sub>Na), the sodium salt of dinitro-o-naphthol, used in dyeing campobello yellow. See under YELLOW.

Chrys-e-is, 1 kris-sē-is; 2 kris-sē-is, n. In Homer's Iliad, a daughter of Chryses, a priest of Apollo, held captive by Agamemnon.

chrys-el-e-phan'tine, 1 kris-el-i-fan'tin; 2 kris-el-i-fan'tin, a. Made of or covered with gold and ivory; as, the Greek chryselephantine statues. These were of wood or clay, to which thin plates of chased gold were attached to represent draperies and hair, and ivory plates to represent flesh. [Gr. chryselephantinos, of gold and ivory.]

Chrys-e-mys, 1 kris-sē-mys; 2 kris-sē-mys, n. Zool. A typical and widely distributed genus of water-tortoises or American terrapins, including the mud-turtle (C. picta), galli ornamented on body and shell-margin with yellow, red, and black. [CHRY + Gr. emys, tortoise.]

chrys-ene, 1 kris-sē-in; 2 kris-sē-in, n. Chem. A reddish-violet, fluorescent, crystalline compound (C<sub>12</sub>H<sub>11</sub>), contained in coal-tar and other substances. — chrys-en-ic, a. Derived from chrysene or from chrysanthrene. — chryseneic acid (Chem.), an acid (C<sub>12</sub>H<sub>11</sub>O<sub>3</sub>) obtained by fusing chrysene with caustic alkali.

Chrys-id, 1 kris-sid; 2 kris-sid, n. pl. Entom. A family of spiciferous hymenopterous insects having the abdomen hanging from the thorax, concave below, and with only four or five visible segments; including the gold-wasps. Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.] Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.] Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.]

chrys'id, 1 kris-sid; 2 kris-sid, n. pl. Entom. A family of spiciferous hymenopterous insects having the abdomen hanging from the thorax, concave below, and with only four or five visible segments; including the gold-wasps. Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.] Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.]

chrys'id, 1 kris-sid; 2 kris-sid, n. pl. Entom. A family of spiciferous hymenopterous insects having the abdomen hanging from the thorax, concave below, and with only four or five visible segments; including the gold-wasps. Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.] Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.]

chrys'id, 1 kris-sid; 2 kris-sid, n. pl. Entom. A family of spiciferous hymenopterous insects having the abdomen hanging from the thorax, concave below, and with only four or five visible segments; including the gold-wasps. Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.] Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.]

chrys'id, 1 kris-sid; 2 kris-sid, n. pl. Entom. A family of spiciferous hymenopterous insects having the abdomen hanging from the thorax, concave below, and with only four or five visible segments; including the gold-wasps. Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.] Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.]

chrys'id, 1 kris-sid; 2 kris-sid, n. pl. Entom. A family of spiciferous hymenopterous insects having the abdomen hanging from the thorax, concave below, and with only four or five visible segments; including the gold-wasps. Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.] Chrys'id, n. (t. g.) [Gr. chrysis, a gold-brodered robe.]

Cil'm'e'-le-dā, 1 sil'm'e'-le-dā; 2 cil'm'e'-le-dā, n. pl. Entom. A family of cimicoid bugs, especially those with the body depressed, wings obsolete, and antennae long; including the bedbug. [C. CIMEX.] — Cil'm'e'-le, a. & n. — Cil'm'e'-le form, a. — Cil'm'e'-le, a.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. A powder or other agent for killing bedbugs. [L. cimex (cimic), bug, & le, adv.]

Cil'm'e'-le-ga, 1 sil'm'e'-le-ga; 2 cil'm'e'-le-ga, n. Bot. A genus of plants of the crowfoot family, of which the common species in the United States are C. racemosa, black snakeroot, and C. americana, American bugbane. [L. cimex (cimic), bug, & ga, drive away, < fujo, flee]

Cil'm'e'-le-gin, 1 sil'm'e'-le-gin; 2 cil'm'e'-le-gin, n. A resin containing the active principle of the black snakeroot, from which it is extracted.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. An oily fluid of disagreeable odor secreted by the bedbug and other hemipters, and ejected as a means of self-defense. — Cil'm'e'-le, a.

Cil'm'er, 1 sil'm'er; 2 cil'm'er, n. [F.] 1. The crest of a medieval helmet. 2. Her. A helmet with lambrequins surmounting an escutcheon.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. Petrol. A felsophy or aphophy of effusive igneous rock, intermediate between trachyte and basalt, and containing nodules of feldspar, augite, and olivine. [Monti Cimici, Italy.]

Cil'm'e', 1 sil'm'e'; 2 cil'm'e', n. [Local, U.S.] The top line of a drift-net. J. BURROUGHS in Scribner's Magazine Aug., 1880, p. 492. [C. dm, a fishing-line.]

Cil'm'e'-ri-an, 1 sil'm'e'-ri-an; 2 cil'm'e'-ri-an, a. 1. Pertaining to or characteristic of the Cimierii, a mythical people mentioned by Homer as living in perpetual darkness; hence, densely dark; shrouded in gloom.

Melt, and dispel, ye spectre-doubts, that roll
Cimmerian darkness o'er the parting soul!

CAMPBELL Pleasures of Hope pt. ii, st. 23.

2. Of or pertaining to the ancient Cimierii, a nomadic people of Crimea and contiguous regions.

Cil'm'e'-ri-an, n. One of the mythical or the historical Cimierii. — Cil'm'e'-ri-an-ism, n. [Rare.] Thick darkness; dense ignorance.

Cil'm'o'-le-dā, 1 sil'm'o'-le-dā; 2 cil'm'o'-le-dā, n. pl. Paleont. A family of fossil remains of marsupial mammals. [L. cimolia; see CIMOLITE.]

Cil'm'o'-le-sau'r-us, 1 sil'm'o'-le-sau'r-us; 2 cil'm'o'-le-sau'r-us, n. Paleont. A genus of fossil reptiles allied to Plesiosaurus. [L. cimolia (see CIMOLITE) & Gr. sauros, lizard.]

Cil'm'o'-lite, 1 sil'm'o'-lite; 2 cil'm'o'-lite, n. Mineral. A clayey or chalky hydrous or basic amorphous aluminum silicate ( $2Al_2O_3 \cdot 9SiO_2 \cdot 6H_2O$ ). [L. cimolia, < Gr. kimolia, < Kimolos, one of the Cyclades.] Cil'm'o'-li-at, < Cil'm'o'-li-an, a.

Cil'm'o', 1 sil'm'o'; 2 cil'm'o', n. An Athenian general and statesman (502-449 B.C.). Kil'mont' [Gr.] — Cil'm'o'-n, a.

Cil'm'-bar, n. Same as CINCABAR.

Cil'ma-lo'a, n. Same as SINALOA.

Cil'ma-mas, 1 sil'ma-mas; 2 cil'ma-mas, n. Platyrrhizus. [Cil'ma, 1 sil'ma; 2 cil'ma, n. Platyrrhizus.]

Cil'm', 1 sil'm; 2 cil'm, n. 1. To fasten a cinch around; hence, to get a tight hold on; put pressure on; force to submission or compliance. 2. In playing cinch, to protect (a trick) with a higher trump than five.

II. t. To tighten the cinch; as, to cinch up.

Cil'm', n. 1. [V. U.S.] A broad saddle-girth, usually of horsehair, canvas, or cordage, with or without straps at the end. See ILLUSTRATION under SADDLE. 2. [Colloq.] Hence, a tight grip; a sure thing; some-thing easily done or ob-tained; as, this is a cinch.

Up to within two weeks Keene has proceeded upon the theory that he had a cinch, and he had not admitted for a moment the possibility of a second failure.

3. A game of cards. [Sp. cingula, girth, < L. cingula, CINGLES.] Cil'm'e', n.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. Chem. A levorotatory compound ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ) one of the constituents of cinchona. [C. CINCHONA & AMID.]

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. Chem. A white crystalline compound ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ) obtained from the alkaloid cinchonin.

Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, 1 sil'm'e'-le-ro-tin; 2 cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2 + H_2O$ ) existing in cinchona. [C. CINCHONA & ROTE.]

Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, 1 sil'm'e'-le-ro-tin; 2 cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. An alcohol of true cinchona-bark ( $C_{12}H_{10}O + H_2O$ ), resembling cholesterol. [C. CINCHONA & OL.]

Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, 1 sil'm'e'-le-ro-tin; 2 cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. A basic compound ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ) obtained as an oily substance from the paraffin-oil of brown coal.

Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, 1 sil'm'e'-le-ro-tin; 2 cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. 1. Med. Peruvian bark; Jesuits' bark. 2. [C.] Bot. A genus of valuable evergreen trees of the madder family, of the tropical valleys of the Andes. The bark yielded by several species is the Peruvian bark or cinchona-bark of commerce, the source of quinine. Extensive plantations are now under cultivation in various parts of India. 3. The genus of the genus Cinchona. [After the Countess of Chinchon, viceroy of Peru, who was cured of a fever by cinchona-bark.] — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ) contained in cinchona-bark. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Same as QUINATE.

Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, 1 sil'm'e'-le-ro-tin; 2 cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ) produced by oxidizing cinchonin or like substance. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ) derived from and isomeric with cinchonin. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. A crystalline bitter alkaloid ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ), isomeric with cinchonin but less powerful, and used medicinally. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. A crystalline alkaloid ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ), similar to cinchonidin, of which it is an isomer, used in medicine. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ), an abraded condition caused by overdoes of cinchona, characterized by buzzing in the head, giddiness, deafness, and temporary loss of sight. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Med. To bring under the influence of cinchona or quinine. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. The study of the properties of cinchona-plants. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. The quantitative determination of quinine and other alkaloids in cinchona-bark. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. Pertaining to tannin as contained in cinchona-bark. quin'-o-tan'-le, < cinchotannic acid, a variety of tannin ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ) extracted from cinchona-bark. Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ) formed by oxidizing cinchonin with potassium permanganate. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. An almost insoluble crystalline alkaloid ( $C_{12}H_{10}O_2$ ), derived from cinchona. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. Same as CINCHONIN. — Cil'm'e'-le-ro-tin, n. Chem. Same as ARICIN.

Cil'm'e', pp. Cincched. S. S.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. Of, pertaining to, or like a cinchona. Cil'm'e'-le, n.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. [Rare.] Curled in rings. [L. cincinnatus, curl.]

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. 1. A manufacturing city; county-seat of Hamilton county, Ohio; on Ohio river; seat of Lane Theological Seminary (Presbyterian), founded in 1829, and University of Cincinnati (non-sectarian), founded in 1870. 2. A town in Appanoose county, Ia. — Cil'm'e'-le, n. I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to Cincinnati. 2. Geol. Of or pertaining to the uppermost of the series of strata comprised in the Ordovician system in North America, following the Mohawkian series and succeeded by the Silurian system, or to the corresponding stage of the Ordovician period. II. n. 1. An inhabitant of Cincinnati. 2. Geol. The Cincinnatiian series of strata; also, the Cincinnatiian stage. [C. Cincinnati, Ohio.]

Cil'm'e'-le, n. See under SOCIETY.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. pl. Roman. A Roman painter, patriot, and dictator.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. [L., 1-2; 2-ē, pl.] Crust. One of the small hooks attached to the stylus. [Dim. of L. cincinnatus, curl.]

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. Bot. A form of sympodial branching in which the lateral axes arise alternately on opposite sides of a relatively main axis; usually applied to a flower-cluster. [L., curl.] Cil'm'e'-le, n. pl. Ornith. A family of oscine birds, including the dippers or water-ouzel. Cil'm'e'-le, n. (t. g.) [Gr. kinklos, a wastail.] — Cil'm'e'-le, n.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. [Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. [L., 1-2; 2-ē, pl.] Zooph. An article for the protrusion of acicula, as in sea-anemones. [Gr. kinklis, latticed gate.]

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. Pathol. Rapid, spasmodic movement or agitation, as of the eyelids, or of the chest in asthma. [Gr. kinklis, < kinklos, the wastail.] [encircled.]

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. pl. Bot. A family of oscine birds, including the dippers or water-ouzel. Cil'm'e'-le, n. (t. g.) [Gr. kinklos, a wastail.] — Cil'm'e'-le, n.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. [Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. [L., 1-2; 2-ē, pl.] Zooph. An article for the protrusion of acicula, as in sea-anemones. [Gr. kinklis, latticed gate.]

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. Pathol. Rapid, spasmodic movement or agitation, as of the eyelids, or of the chest in asthma. [Gr. kinklis, < kinklos, the wastail.] [encircled.]

Cil'm'e', 1 sil'm; 2 cil'm, n. [Rare.] Bound around; girded; Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. pl. Bot. A family of flagella. [L. cinctus, pp. of cingo, gird, & PLANULA.] — Cil'm'e'-le, n. pl. Bot.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. pl. Bot. A family of oscine birds, including the dippers or water-ouzel. Cil'm'e'-le, n. (t. g.) [Gr. kinklos, a wastail.] — Cil'm'e'-le, n.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. [Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. [L., 1-2; 2-ē, pl.] Zooph. An article for the protrusion of acicula, as in sea-anemones. [Gr. kinklis, latticed gate.]

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. Pathol. Rapid, spasmodic movement or agitation, as of the eyelids, or of the chest in asthma. [Gr. kinklis, < kinklos, the wastail.] [encircled.]

Cil'm'e', 1 sil'm; 2 cil'm, n. [Rare.] Bound around; girded; Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. pl. Bot. A family of flagella. [L. cinctus, pp. of cingo, gird, & PLANULA.] — Cil'm'e'-le, n. pl. Bot.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. pl. Bot. A family of oscine birds, including the dippers or water-ouzel. Cil'm'e'-le, n. (t. g.) [Gr. kinklos, a wastail.] — Cil'm'e'-le, n.

Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. [Cil'm'e'-le, 1 sil'm'e'-le; 2 cil'm'e'-le, n. [L., 1-2; 2-ē, pl.] Zooph. An article for the protrusion of acicula, as in sea-anemones. [Gr. kinklis, latticed gate.]

Cin'e-mom'é-ter, 1 sin'i-mém't-er; 2 cin'e-móm'e-ter, n. Same as KINEMETER.
Cin-en'en'-chy-ma, 1 si-nen-'ki-ma; 2 ci-nén-'cy-ma, n. Bot. Laticiferous tissue. [Gr. kineō, move, + enchyma, in fusion, < en, in, + cheō, pour.]—cin'en-en-chym'a-tous, a.
Ci-nene', 1 si-nín'; 2 ci-nén', n. Chem. A liquid terpene ( $\text{C}_{10}\text{H}_{18}$ ), occurring in oleum cinæ, having a lemon-like odor. [> CINCAMON.]
*Cin'e-neg'a-tiv*e, 1 sin'i-nég'-a-tív; 2 cin'e-nég'-a-tív, n. A photograph, film of cinematograph negatives. [> Gr. kineō, move + NEGATIVE.]
Cin'e-o-graph, 1 sin'i'-o-gráf; 2 cin'e-o-gráf, n. A cineograph.
Cin'e-ol, 1 sin'i'-ól or -oi; 2 cin'e-ól or -ói, n. Chem. A pleasant camphoraceous liquid ( $\text{C}_{15}\text{H}_{21}\text{O}$ ), the mother-substance of wormseed, cajuput, and eucalyptus-oil. [> CINCAMON (Cinnamomum camphora, the camphor-tree) + -OL.]
Cin'er-a'-ceous, 1 sin'ar-ě-shūs; 2 cin'er-ā-shūs, a. Of or like ashes; ash-colored. [< L. cineraceus, < cinis (ciner-), ashes.]
Cin'e-ra'-ri-a, 1 sin'i-rér'-n-a; 2 cin'e-rári-a, n. 1. Bot. A genus of mostly South-African herbs or small shrubs of the aster family. 2. [-] A florist's name for Senecio cruentus, formerly called Cineraria cruenta, a showy white- or purple-flowered species in cultivation, from the Canary Islands. [< L. cinerarius, of ashes, < cinis (ciner-), ashes.]
Cin'e-ra'-rí-um, 1 sin'i-rér'-n-um; 2 cin'e-rári-úm, n. [-RÍ-a, pl.] [L. Rom. Antiq. A niche in a tomb for a cinerary urn or a sarcophagus.]
Cin'er-a'-ry, 1 sin'ar-ě-rí; 2 cin'er-ā-ry, a. Of, relating to, or containing ashes. [< L. cinerarius; see CINERARIA].—cinera-ry urn, an urn to hold the ashes of the cremated dead.
Cin'er-a'tion, 1 sin'ar-ě'-shon; 2 cin'er-ā'-shon, n. Reduction to ashes; cremation; incineration.
Cin'er-a'tor, 1 sin'ar-ě-tór; 2 cin'er-ā-tór, n. A furnace for cremating dead bodies.
Ci-ne're-a, 1 si-ní-rí-a; 2 ci-né-re-a, n. 1. Anat. The gray matter of the nervous centers. 2. A cinereal material, as a fertilizer. [< L. cinereus, ashy, < cinis (ciner-), ashes.]
Ci-ne're-al, 1 si-ní-rí-al; 2 ci-né-re-al, a. 1. Of or pertaining to the cinerea. 2. Cinereous. 3. Of or pertaining to cinder or ashes; making ashes; as, cinereal plant-elements. 4f. Cinery.
Ci-ne're-ous, 1 si-ní-rí-us; 2 ci-né-re-ús, a. Having the color of ashes; ash-gray; ashen; resembling ashes.
Cin'er-es'-cent, 1 sin'ər-ě-sent; 2 cin'er-ēs-ent, a. Turning to ash-colored; grayish. [< LL. cinerescent(-t)-e, ppr. of cineresco, turn to ashes, < L. cinis (ciner-), ashes.]
Cin'er-i'tious, 1 sin'ar-íš-ŭs; 2 cin'er-íš-ŭs, a. Of the nature of ashes; ashen; ash-gray: said specifically of the gray or ash-colored brain- or nerve-substance.
Cin'er-u-lent', a. Abounding in ashes.

The chief classes are: the class of a complex (the class of any one of the complex), c. of an algebraic surface (the number of tangent planes to the surface of the complex through any right line), c. of a congruence (the number of the right lines of a congruence through any point in space), c. of a cone (the class of the plane sections of a cone), c. of a space curve (the number of the planes of osculation of a space curve through an arbitrary point), and c. of a twisted curve (the class of any cone on which a twisted curve lies).

10. Naut. A division of vessels according to their size and strength; as, battleship class. 11. Crystallog. A single type of the thirty-two into which all crystals are divided as regards symmetry. 12. Naut. The indication of the seaworthiness, construction, etc., of a merchant vessel as determined by Lloyd's; as, the 100A class. [< F. classe, < L. classis, class].

SYN: association, caste, circle, clan, clique, club, company, coterie, grade, order, rank, set. A caste is hereditary; a class may be independent of lineage or descent; membership in a caste is supposed to be for life; membership in a class may be very transient; a religious and ceremonial sacredness attaches to the caste, as not to the class. The rich and the poor form separate classes; yet individuals are constantly passing from each to the other; the classes in a college remain the same, but their membership changes every year. We speak of rank among hereditary nobility or military officers; of various orders of the priesthood; by accommodation, we may refer in a general way to the high ranks, the lower orders of any society. Grade implies some regular scale of valuation, and some inherent qualities for which a person or thing is placed higher or lower in the scale; as, the coarser and finer grades of wool; a man of an inferior grade. A coterie is a small company of persons of similar tastes, who meet frequently in an informal way, rather for social enjoyment than for any serious purpose. Clique has always an unfavorable meaning. A clique is always fractional, implying some greater gathering of which it is a part; the association breaks up into cliques. Persons unite in a clique through simple liking for one another, and withdraw into a clique largely through aversion to outsiders. A set, while exclusive, is more extensive than a clique, and chiefly of persons who are united by common social station, etc. Circle is similar in meaning to set, but of wider application; we speak of scientific and religious as well as of social circles. See SORT. -Prep. a class of merchants; the senior class of (sometimes of) Harvard; the classes in college.

clas'sic, 1. klas'ik; 2. klas'ic, a. 1. Belonging to the first class or rank in literature or art; authoritative as a model or exemplar; standard; as, classic authors. I use the word classic in its own sense of senatorial, academic, and authoritative. RUSKIN Art of Eng. lect. iii, p. 76. [A. 1854.]

2. Connected with or made famous by Greek or Latin authors; hence, connected historically with any great authors or events; as, classic lands; classic ground. [< forming to a high ideal; chaste; pure. 4. Classical. L. classicus, of the first rank. < classis, class. SYN: see PRAT. clas'sic, n. 1. Any book or work of art that may be or is regarded as a standard or a model; especially, any literary or artistic production of Greek or Roman genius.

A classic is properly a book . . . which can be simple without being vulgar, elevated without being distant, and which is something neither ancient nor modern, always new and incapable of growing old. Lowell Among my Books, Spenser in second series, p. 126. [H. M. & Co. 1886.]

2. Any author, ancient or modern, whose work is generally accepted as being a standard of excellence: distinguished from romantic.

And so Macaulay dwelt at ease in his pleasant retreat, a classic in his able life-time.

G. O. TREVELYAN Macaulay vol. ii, ch. 14, p. 380. [H. 1877.]
3. One who is familiar with classical literature. 4. pl. Specif., the literature that has descended from the Greeks and Romans, especially as studied in modern colleges.—The Six Classics, see THE FIVE CLASSICS, under FIVE.

class'-cal, 1 klas'-kal; 2 clās'-i-cal, n. 1. Of or pertaining to the ancient Greeks and Romans, their history, literature, or art; specif., pertaining to Greek and Roman literature and art during the period of highest culture; as, classical mythology; the revival of classical learning.

The social life of Athens in the classical age was such that only very able men could take any pleasure in it.

JOSEPH COOK Heredit lect. iii, p. 12. [O. & Co. 1879.]

2. Having a thorough knowledge of Greek and Latin literature; as, a classical scholar. 3. Adhering to rules and forms of Greek and Roman masterpieces of literature; as, the classical drama; the classical school of literature, as opposed to the romantic. 4. Resembling or modeled after the highest forms of ancient art; as, classical features. 5. Mus. (1) Subordinating ideas to form. (2) Composed by the great masters.

It [classical] is used of works which have held their place in general estimation for a considerable time, and of new works . . . of the same type and style. Hence the name has come to be especially applied to works in the form which was adopted by the great masters of the latter part of the 18th century, as instrumental works in the sonata form, and operas constructed after the received traditions; and in this sense the term was used as the opposite of "romantic."

GEORGE DICKSON Music and Musicians vol. i, p. 547. [MACEY '08.]

6. Of or pertaining to a class. 7. Ecd. Of or pertaining to a class. 8. Classic. 9. Relating to or naming the doctrines of Adam Smith and his adherents, Mill, Malthus, etc., who used, in general, the deductive method; as, the classical economists as distinguished from the historical economists. [< L. classicus; see CLASSIC.]

class'-si-fi-ca-tion, 1 klas'-si-fi-kā-shon; 2 clās'-si-fi-cā-shon, n. 1. The act or process of arranging by classes; a grouping into classes; the putting together of like objects or facts under a common designation; a process based on similarities of nature, attributes, or relations.

Classification may proceed by the gathering together of similar things into a class, or by the unfolding of general groups into narrower or more specific divisions. The special classifications in the various sciences, physical or mental, will be found under their particular names. See, for example, BOTANY, MATHEMATICS, ZOOLOGY, etc.

In order to reach the most valuable scientific results, classification should keep in view the most important properties.

D. S. GREGORY Practical Logic pt. 1, ch. 1, p. 42. [E. & B. 1881.]

2. A system of objects, facts, or ideas considered as having been classified; specif. (Biol.), a series of combinations of organized beings into more or less comprehensive groups, as species, genera, families, orders, classes, branches (or subkingdoms), kingdoms, and various intermediate categories.

A natural and true classification, then, is a statement of near or remote relationships according to the degree of difference the forms sought to be classified have undergone in their descent from a more or less remote ancestor.

NEW INTERNATIONAL ENCYCLOPEDIA, vol. iv, p. 816.

—artificial classification, classification based on superficial or accidental rather than on radical agreements and differences.—expansive c., in library usage, any classification of books in which new subclasses may be easily and conveniently inserted at any point without altering the notation; specif.  WITH ABBREVIATIONS AND POPULAR EQUIVALENTS.

Upper clouds—
 1. Cirrus (ct) Detached clouds, delicate and fibrous, taking the form of feathers. "Mares' tails"; when in long converging bands, "polar bands" or "Noah's ark," which blend into

2. Cirro-stratus (ct-st) A thin, whitish, often web-like sheet. "Sheet-cloud."

 3. Cirro-cumulus (ct-cu) Small globular masses or white flakes. "Mackerel sky."

4. Alto-cumulus (ct-cu) Large globular masses, white or grayish, partially shaded. "Flock-clouds" (Ger. "Schäffchen").

5. Alto-stratus (ct-st) A thick sheet of a gray or bluish color, often causing solar and lunar coronæ.

Lower clouds—
 6. Strato-cumulus (st-cu) Large globular masses or rolls of strato-cumulus, frequently covering the whole sky.

7. Nimbus (nb) A thick layer of dark clouds, without definite shape, from which continued rain or snow generally falls. "Rain-cloud."

Clouds of diurnal ascending currents—

8. Cumulus (cu) Thick clouds with dome-shaped summits and flat bases. "Woolpack clouds." Ragged, detached parts are called fracto-cumulus. Udder-shaped protuberances beneath constitute mammato-cumulus ("pocky cloud," "festoon cloud").

9. Cumulo-nimbus (cu-nb) Heavy masses, mountainous, turret-shaped, or anvil-shaped; generally with a fibrous sheet above (false cirrus), and commonly accompanied by local showers. "Thunder-clouds," "thunder-heads." Detached fragments are called fracto-nimbus ("scud" or "wrack").

 10. Stratus (st) A uniform layer of cloud resembling a fog but not resting on the ground. Detached fragments are called fracto-stratus.

Howard's classification, made in 1802, is: (1) Cirrus: parallel, flexuous, or diverging fibers, extensible in any or all directions. (2) Cumulus: convex or conical heaps increasing upward from a horizontal base. (3) Stratus: a widely extended, continuous horizontal sheet increasing from below. (4) Cirro-cumulus: small, well-defined, roundish masses in close horizontal arrangement. (5) Cirro-stratus: horizontal or slightly inclined masses bent downward or undulated; separate or in groups of small clouds. (6) Cumulo-stratus: the cirro-stratus blended with the cumulus. (7) Cumulo-cirro-stratus or nimbus: the rain-cloud. This classification, though no longer in use, is the basis of nearly all subsequent systems. Several hundred names of cloud-forms have been proposed by various writers, or are in popular use; the more important are defined in their alphabetical places in this dictionary. The international classification given above is now, however, officially adopted in all countries.

2. Anything resembling a cloud; as, a cloud of dust; a cloud of arrows. 3. coal, 1 kôl; 2 còl, n. I. 1. To supply, as a ship, with coal. 2. To reduce to coal, as wood. 3. [Rare.] To write or sketch with charcoal. II. i. To take in coal, as a locomotive.

coal, n. 1. Mineral. An amorphous substance derived by the carbonization of vegetation of prehistoric ages, containing free carbon and different hydrocarbons and also complex substances carrying oxygen, sulfur, and nitrogen, contaminated with various amounts of mineral matter, such as pyrites, gypsum, lime, magnesia and silica, soda and potash; found in beds or veins in the earth and used as fuel.

It is brittle, compact, massive, and sometimes laminated, and varies in color from black to brown. Coal is classified into anthracite or hard coal, bituminous or soft coal, subbituminous or cannel, and lignite and peat, according to the amount of volatile matter it contains. Graphitic anthracite has from 1 to 3 per cent. of volatile matter; anthracite, 3 to 10 per cent.; semianthracite, 10 to 15 per cent.; subbituminous, 15 to 25 per cent.; bituminous, above 25 per cent.; and subbituminous, above 40 per cent.

Bituminous coals that swell and cake when heated are called caking and are used for the production of coke; they are called cannel (or jet) when rich in gas with low heating power. Subbituminous coals include lignite or brown coal, which has over 50 per cent. of volatile matter; as also has peat coal. Anthracite coal in the American market is commonly graded into the following sizes: steamboat, broken for grates, egg, stove, nut, pea, buckwheat, rice, barley (the latter being the smallest), and also known as No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3 buckwheat. The American coal deposits run from low to high volatility from east to west; thus anthracite is furthest east, the semibituminous and bituminous in the western Appalachian coal-field, and the cannel and lignite coal in the middle west and extreme west.

2. One of the pieces into which coal is broken for use in Great Britain used in the plural equally with the singular in a collective sense.

3. A glowing or charred fragment of wood or other fuel. And his heart was hot within him. Like a living coal his heart was.

EXPLANATION OF THE PLATE OF COINS.

It is seldom possible to ascertain the exact date of an ancient coin. The dates here assigned represent approximately the periods within which the coins must have appeared.

1. Babylonian Stater, Lydia.
Electrum; 166.8 grains. About 700 B. C.
Reverse: An oblong incuse between two incuse squares. This is the earliest coin known.

The Lydians are reputed to have been the first people to make stamped money. Electrum, consisting of three parts of gold and a native alloy of one part of silver, was used in the first period of the Lydian coinage. The weights of the coins conformed to the Babylonian silver standard. Afterward the Phoenician silver standard was used concurrently with the Babylonian, probably for the sea-trade with the western coast-towns. When Cræsus abandoned electrum, he produced, by reducing the Phoenician weight one fourth, a gold coin weighing exactly a gold stater, and by a similar reduction of the Babylonian weight he obtained the Greek gold stater of Eubœa.

Silver; 192 grains. 700-480 B. C.
Obverse: A sea-tortoise (the symbol of Astarte, the Phœnician goddess of trade). Earliest known silver coin.
Reverse: An incuse square, divided into eight compartments.

According to the Parian chronicle, Phidon, king of Argos, established the earliest Greek mint, in the island of Ægina. The Æginetan silver coinage is almost as ancient as the electrum coinage of Lydia. The Greeks introduced engraved dies in place of the rude punches of the Lydians.

Silver; 128 grains. 700-480 B. C.
Obverse: KAYA (Caulonia). Apollo naked, holding in his raised right hand a branch, on his outstretched left arm a small running figure with winged feet, and in the left hand a branch; in front, a stag looking back.
Reverse: Same type of incuse, with small figure wanting. An incuse coin of very ancient date. Caulonia in Brutium was one of the earliest colonies established by the Greeks on the shores of southern Italy.

4. Stater of Halicarnassus.
Electrum; 216.3 grains. 700-480 B. C.
Obverse: ΦΑΝΟΣ ΕΜΙ ΣΗΜΑ ("I am the sign of Phanes"). A stag feeding.
Reverse: An oblong incuse between two incuse squares. The earliest known incuse coin, struck probably about 500 B. C. by Phanes, a vassal of Egypt, who joined Cambyses, king of Persia, in his invasion of that country, or possibly at an earlier date by an ancestor of this Phanes.

Silver; 263.6 grains. 485-478 B. C.
Obverse: ΞΥΡΑΚΟΙΩΝ ("of the Syracusans"). Head of the nymph Arethusa surrounded by four dolphins.
Reverse: A quadriga, with Nike alighting upon the yoke; commemorating the Olympian victory of King Gelon.

The coinage of Syracuse, while lacking the artistic vigor of the coins of Asia Minor and the noble simplicity of Greece, was the richest in design and the most delicately executed of the Greek moneys. Agonistic subjects were commonly chosen for the types. Gelon, tyrant of Gela, won the chariot-race at Olympia in 488 B. C.

Copper; the widow's mite. Luke xxi, 2.
This coin has been termed lepton on the authority of Theophylact and of Mr. Du Bois, for many years director of the United States Mint, Philadelphia.

Obverse: יהונתן המלך ("Jonathan the king"). Within the intermediate spaces of the sun with eight rays.
Reverse: ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ ("of King Alexander"). Round an anchor.

This was the smallest Jewish coin in circulation in Jerusalem, worth intrinsically perhaps not more than a mill in United States money. The people were forbidden to bring into the temple coins that were not Jewish. Small bronze pieces were struck, many of them over other coins, by Alexander Jannæus, king of the Jews (104-78 B. C.).

Silver; 234 grains. 400-336 B. C.
Obverse: ΕΦ ("of the Ephesians").
Reverse: ΑΡΙΣΤΟΔΗΜΟΣ ("Aristodemus"). The fore part of a stag and a date-palm.

This is an example of the Ephesian coinage between the peace of Antalcidas and the time of Lysimachus. The only subjects treated on the rudely executed coins of Ephesus refer to the worship of the Ephesian Diana, an Asiatic goddess identified by the Greeks with Artemis, the essentially different. Both the stag and the bee are her symbols.

Silver; 220.5 grains. 400-336 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Apollo, facing.
Reverse: ΑΜΦΙΠΟΛΙΤΕΩΝ ("of the Amphipolitans"). A racing-torch.

The silver coins of this Thracian city, founded as an Athenian colony in 437 B. C., are remarkable for intensity of expression of the face.

Silver; 184 grains. 400-336 B. C.
Obverse: Head of Hera, wearing stephanos adorned with flowers, earring, and necklace.
Reverse: ΑΡΓΕΙΩΝ ("of the Argives"). A wolf between two dolphins.

This head of Hera is copied from the famous statue of that goddess by Polyctetus at Argos. The wolf is the emblem of the Lycian Apollo, symbolizing winter slain by the god of warmth and light. The dolphins, emblems of the Delphinian Apollo, symbolize the calming of the wintry sea and resumption of navigation.

10. Stater of Corinth.
Silver; 132.5 grains. 400-336 B. C.
Obverse: Pegasus flying; beneath, the letter Koppa (the initial of the city's name).
Reverse: Head of Pallas; behind, an acanthus.

The antique Koppa was retained as a distinguishing mark of the coinage of Corinth, which, in the 6th and 4th centuries B. C., had a circulation second only to that of Athens. The head of Athena on these coins is always represented with a Corinthian helmet.

Gold; 129 grains. 521-485 B. C.

Obverse: A crowned archer, holding bow and spear (the royal symbol of Persia).

Gold; 132.6 grains. 400-336 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Helios, facing, his hair arranged in locks suggestive of rays.

Reverse: ΡΩΔΙΩΝ ("of the Rhodians"). A rose with a bud and a spray of vine with grapes, the whole in an incuse square.

The rose borne on the coins of Rhodes is a speaking type, expressing the name of the city. This and the head of Helios are almost the only types used. The head has a peculiar grandeur on the Rhodian coins, especially on this, one of the finest of all Greek coins.

Gold; 264 grains. 336-323 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Pallas.

Reverse: ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ ("of Alexander"). Nike, holding a wreath and a trophy.

This coin is probably from one of the European mints, and was struck during the lifetime of Alexander.

Silver; 244.1 grains. 400-336 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Pallas, wearing a crested Athenian helmet, on which is Scylla, with dogs' heads springing from her waist; on the neckpiece, a griffin.

Reverse: ΘΟΥΡΙΩΝ ("of the Thurians"). A butting bull; in exergue, a fish (the tunny).

This is a magnificent specimen of the engraver's art. Thurium, founded by the Athenians near the site of Sybaris, may have borrowed the device of the bull from the coin of the more ancient town.

Silver; 660.9 grains. 400-336 B. C.

Obverse: ΞΥΡΑΚΟΙΩΝ ("of the Syracusans"). Head of Persephone, wearing a wreath of grain and surrounded by dolphins; beneath, EYAINÉ (standing for Euphrosyne, the name of the artist).

Reverse: A victorious quadriga; in exergue, armor and the word ΑΓΑΑ ("prizes").

These coins, issued by Dionysius, mark the acme of realistic art and artistic refinement in coin-engraving, of which Euphrosyne was one of the greatest masters of all ages.

Silver; 265 grains. 400-336 B. C.

Obverse: Head of a female (perhaps Dido or the moon-goddess), wearing a tiara of Phrygian form.

Reverse: A lion and a palm-tree; in exergue, a Punic inscription signifying "of the people of the camp."

This is the work of a Greek engraver, and excels all other Carthaginian coins that have been preserved. When the fugitive Phœnicians, shipwrecked on the African coast with their queen, Dido, were digging the foundations of the city that was to be their future home, they came upon a palm-tree branch and a horse's head, which were taken to be good omens and were subsequently adopted as monetary types.

Silver; 700 grains. 280-190 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Persephone.

This type is executed in a debased and exaggerated style, very different from the purer art of the earlier period.

Silver; 66.7 grains. 280-190 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Roma, wearing the winged helmet; behind, X (signifying 10 asses).

Reverse: ROMA (Rome) (in incused letters). The Dioscuri, represented as charging at the battle of Lake Regillus.

This piece belongs to the earliest period of the Roman silver coinage, the first issue of which was struck in 269 B. C.

Silver; 269 grains. 480-400 B. C.

Obverse: ΞΕΛΙΝΩΝ. Selinus, the tutelary river-god, sacrificing at an altar, before which is a cock; in his left hand, the lustral branch; behind, a selinon- or parsley-leaf and a bull's image on a pedestal.

Reverse: ΞΕΛΙΝΟΝΤΙΩΝ ("of the Selinuntines"). Apollo and Artemis in a quadriga, Apollo shooting arrows.

The river-god is engaged in an Esculapian libation, as is shown by the cock, and the design symbolizes the draining of a marsh, whereby the city was relieved of a plague sent by Apollo, which is referred to by the type of the reverse. The selinon-leaf is a striking emblem of the town, which took its name from this plant, an abundant product of its fertile soil.

Gold; 228.2 grains. 306-284 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Ptolemy I., diademed and with an egis.

Reverse: ΠΤΟΛΕΜΑΙΟΥ ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ ("of King Ptolemy"). An eagle on a thunderbolt.

Ptolemy Soter, who assumed the title of king in 306, struck coins in Cyprus, Cyrenæa, and other parts besides Egypt. He laid the foundation of the Alexandrian library.

Silver; 44.5 grains. 280-190 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Jupiter.

Reverse: VICTORIA. Victory crowning a trophy; between them, a test (the moneyer's mark).

The victoriatrus was at first a coin of Campania; but after the fall of Capua (211 B. C.) it was minted at Rome and became current in the provinces.

Silver; 262 grains. 336-280 B. C.

Obverse: Head of the deified Alexander, with the horn of Ammon.

This is one of the coins struck by Lysimachus, king of Macedonia. The head of Alexander is probably copied from the bronze statue by Lysippus or from a gem-portrait by Pyrgoteles. Lysippus was the only sculptor permitted to make statues of Alexander, Pyrgoteles had the exclusive privilege of engraving him, and the conqueror himself said that Apelles alone should paint him.

Silver; 259.5 grains. 179-168 B. C.

Obverse: Head of King Perseus; beneath, ΖΩΙΑΟΥ ("of Zolius").

This is a striking portrait of the last Greek king of Macedonia. Zolius was probably director of mints.

Silver; 16.5 grains. 280-190 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Roma; behind, IIS (2 asses and a semis).

Reverse: The Dioscuri.

After the introduction of silver coinage at Rome (269 B. C.) the issue of gold and silver money was forbidden to all the subjected provinces of Italy.

Silver; 34.5 grains. 280-190 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Roma, wearing the winged helmet; behind head, V (5 asses).

Reverse: ROMA (incuse letters). The Dioscuri charging.

Silver; 257.5 grains. 190-100 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Minos, with royal diadem.

Reverse: ΚΝΩΣΙΩΝ ("of the People of Cnossus"). A square labyrinth.

Minos was the reputed founder of the city, and on its coins the labyrinth is nearly always represented. The local types of the Cretan coinage were retained under the Macedonian empire and in the later coins of debased Attic style, of which this is an example.

Gold; 429 grains. 285-247 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Arsinoë II., sister and second wife of Ptolemy Philadelphus II.

Reverse: ΑΡΣΙΝΟΗΣ ΦΙΛΑΔΕΛΦΟΥ ("of Arsinoë, wife of Philadelphus"). Double cornucopia.

Silver; 254 grains. 190-133 B. C.

Obverse: Head with turreted crown.

Reverse: ΣΜΥΡΝΑΙΩΝ ("of the people of Smyrna"), in a wreath of oak-leaves.

The turreted head may be a personification of the town.

Silver; 265 grains. 480-400 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Athena.

Reverse: ΑΘΕ ("of Athens"). Owl and olive-branch.

This is an archaistic coin. This copy of the archaic style was maintained because any alteration in the appearance of the Athenian coins, which had a very wide circulation and covered a long period of time, might have damaged their credit. The wreath of olives alludes to the widely celebrated excellence and value of the oil of the Athenian olive-groves.

Silver; 220 grains. 143-135 B. C.

Reverse: יהושע הריבוי ("Jerusalem the holy").

A triple lily. "I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily." Hosea xiv, 5.

The right to coin money was conferred by Antiochus VII. (138-129 B. C.) on Simon Maccabeus, the brother of Judas, high priest and prince of the Jews. The type on the reverse is supposed to represent either Aaron's rod budding or a native lily. The chalice on the obverse of these coins is usually called the pot of manna. The shekel with which Abraham bought the cave of Machpelah was a weight, and in the book of Job is called kestiah (a lamb), the weight, perhaps, being so shaped.

Gold; 120 grains. 2 B. C.

Obverse: CAESAR AVGVSTVS DIVI F. PATER PATRIAE ("Cæsar Augustus, son of the god, father of his country"). Head of Augustus, laureate.

Reverse: C. L. CAESARES. AVGVSTI F. COS. DESIG. PRINC. IVVENT ("Caius and Lucius Cæsar, sons of Augustus, consuls elect, princes of the youth"). Caius and Lucius, each clad in toga and holding a shield and spear; in the field, a simpulum and an augur's staff.

Caius and Lucius, sons of his daughter Julia, were chosen by Augustus as his heirs, but both died before his own death.

Gold; 123 grains. About 27 B. C.

Obverse: CAESAR. Head of Augustus.

An aureus of Julius Cæsar weighed 123 grains, exactly the weight of an English sovereign. An aureus of Augustus that weighed 540 grains was found at Herculaneum. The fee of a lawyer was a hundred aurei. By the Justinian code it was allowed to risk only one aureus at dice.

33. Coin of Antioch (?).
Silver; 221 grains. 52-30 B. C.

Obverse: ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ ΚΑΘΟΛΑΤΡΑ ΘΕΑ ΝΕΥΤΕΡΑ ("Queen Cleopatra, a later goddess"). Bust of Cleopatra, diademed. This is the celebrated Cleopatra.

Silver; 261.2 grains. About 180-150 B. C.

Obverse: Bust of the king, with helmet of unusual shape.

Reverse: ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ ΜΕΤΑΥΟΥ ΕΥΚΡΑΤΙΔΟΥ ("of the great King Eucratides"). The Dioscuri on horseback.

The coins of this king have been found in great abundance, an evidence of his vast wealth. He greatly extended the territory of the Græco-Bactrian princes, and from this fact was called "the lord of a thousand cities."

Silver; 44 grains. 190-100 B. C.

Obverse: Head of Pallas, wearing a crested helmet.

Reverse: A palladium.

36. Roman Coin.
Gold; 123 grains. About 43-42 B. C.

Obverse: BRVTVS IMP. ("Brutus Imperator"). Head of Brutus, the whole in a laurel wreath.

Reverse: CASCA LONGVS. A trophy between the prows of two ships.

Casca Longus was another name of Publius Servilius Casca, who struck the first blow at Cæsar.

See what a rent the envious Casca made.

SHAKESPEARE Julius Cæsar act iii, sc. 2.

The trophy commemorates a naval victory gained by the lieutenant Brutus and Cassius over the fleet of the triumvirs, at the very time the conspirators themselves were being defeated on land.

col'our, 1 kol'ūr, v. I. 1. To give a color to; to color, put color on; infuse color into; especially, to tinge or color. 2. To dye; to stain. 3. Figuratively: (1) To make to appear in a false, particularly a specious, light; represent as better or worse than the reality. (2) To modify in nature or character; give a tone to; as, to color one's opinions by one's private resentments; his French training colored his style. 3f. To conceal.

II. 1. To take on or change color; especially, to grow red in the face; blush; to show signs of ripening, as fruit. [< F. colorer, < L. color, < color, tint.] See COLOR. SYN: see GABLE; STAIN; col'or'er, n.

col'or, n. 1. That quality of an object by which it emits, reflects, or transmits certain rays of light and absorbs others, thus producing a specific effect on the eye, depending on the nature of the rays reaching the nervous elements of the retina, the immediate stimulus of which is photochemical. God's will moves freely, and I follow it. As color follows light. E. B. BROWNING Drama of Exile no. 1.

2. Any one of the hues observed in the rainbow or spectrum, or one of the tints produced by the blending of those rays: sometimes technically limited to primary colors, and then distinguished from hue (a compound color), tint (diluted with white), and shade (mixed with black). In trade use, as in dyeing, or colloquially, black and white are also included as colors. See SPECTRUM.

The sky is not blue color merely; it is blue fire—and cannot be painted. RUSKIN Modern Painters vol. IV, p. 34, [w. a. n. 1859.]

3. Psychol. Any stimulation of the eye and the more internal organism of vision, subjectively regarded. All such effects are classified as sensations of color and vary in (1) color-tone, or quality as determined by the wave-lengths of the stimulus, (2) purity, or saturation, as determined by freedom from admixture of other color-tones, and (3) brightness, as dependent both upon the degree of saturation and the total intensity of the light. Various theories have been proposed to account for the experienced changes in color-sensations and similar visual phenomena as due to the results of analyzing or mixing the different color-tones, or to the different parts of the retina on which the stimulus falls. Of these, the most celebrated are the Young-Helmholtz theory, which conjectures three substances in the retina, responding to long waves, short waves, and waves of intermediate length, of the stimulus light; and the theory of Hering, which proposes three pairs of receptors, sensitive respectively to the white-black, red-green, and yellow-blue series of stimulations. In favor of the latter theory it may be said that the sensations of the various shades of gray in the white-black series are no longer supposed to be due to absence of specific stimulus.

4. Specifically: (1) Any hue as distinguished from white; especially, the hue of a colored person; as, a man of color. (2) Bot. Any hue other than green. (3) In pictures, fabrics, etc., any hue except black or white; as, she looks better in colors than in mourning. 5. Complexion; especially, the hue of health; ruddiness; as, she had a great deal of color.

Your colour, I warrant you, is as red as my rose.

6. A paint or pigment; in printing, equal distribution of ink and strength of impression. 7. A false or superficial appearance; pretense; disguise. The law whereby He worketh is eternal, and therefore can have no show or colour of mutability.

Hooker Ecclesiastical Polity p. 64, [n. a. s. 1833.]

8. (1) Mil. & Naval. The official flag or flags carried by a military body, regiment, or warship; a designated one of these; the national flag; used mostly in the plural.

In the army of the United States, and most other armies, the regiment, as the unit of organization, carries two flags: the national flag or national color and the regimental color. They are spoken of as a pair or stand of colors; or, in the U. S. cavalry, as standards. In the British army each regiment or battalion has a royal or King's color (Union Jack) and a regimental color consisting of a silk flag of a color similar to that of the regiment facings; it has the blue union in the corner and is embrodered with the number, title and honors of the regiment. In the U. S. army national and regimental colors vary in form and size. According to the U. S. Infantry Drill Regulations, "The word color implies the national color and includes the regimental color when both are present." The Infantry regiments carry a national color embrodered in silver and a regimental color made of blue silk with an embrodered U. S. coat of arms containing the number and name of the regiment in white characters upon a red scroll. The battalions of engineers carry the national color, upon which is embrodered the title of the battalion, and the battalion color, which is made of scarlet silk and contains a castle in the center with the battalion number above and the words "U. S. Engineers" below. The cavalry standards are smaller than the Infantry colors: the regimental standard being of yellow silk and containing an embrodered U. S. coat of arms in the center and the name and number of the regiment in white characters upon a red scroll. On parade the regimental is placed on the left of the national color. The colors of a war-ship are the national flag carried over the stern whenever the ship is in commission and a masthead-flag denoting the rank of its commander when he is a flag-officer; those of a yacht or a merchant ship are the national ensign (in its appropriate form—see FLAG) and the flag of the vessel's owner or club. Lack of proper colors exposes a ship to arrest for piracy, hence the phrases to show one's colors, to sail under false colors, etc. Lowering and lifting, or dipping, the colors, is a form of salute or its acknowledgment, more common and less ceremonial at sea than on land. To strike one's colors is to indicate surrender; hence the opposite phrases: to stick to one's colors, to nail the colors to the mast, and the like.

(2) A flag, badge, ribbon, or other device used as a distinction; as, college colors, colors of a race-horse, etc. (3) U. S. Army & Navy. The salute made to the national flag when it is hoisted in the morning and lowered in the evening. The ceremony is accompanied by special music. 9. Art. Coloring. 10. Mus. (1) Timbre; clang-tint. (2) The tone, or characteristic effect, of a composition as produced by specific rhythmic, harmonic, or melodic means. 11. (1) A semblance; appearance; as, having color of truth. (2) A prima-facie right. See COLOR OF OFFICE and COLOR OF TITLE, below. 12. Peculiar character; kind; variety; tone.

BUTCH. Am. Commonwealth vol. I, p. 356, [MACY, 1833.]

13. Phren. The faculty of appreciating colors and their harmonious combinations. 14. Her. See TINCTURE, 15. Law. An apparent or prima-facie right of action but insufficient in point of law: a plea formerly advanced with a view to having a case tried by the court as a question of law instead of by the jury as a question of fact. 16. A small particle or trace of gold in auriferous sand or gravel. 17. Liveliness or animation; vividness, especially in literary work. 18. In calico-printing, a coloring-matter or mordant which is thickened with gum or starch. 19. A dye or dyestuff.

The natural and artificial colors such as dyes and dyestuffs are divided into classes according to their properties and uses. The acid colors are those which are used in an acid bath for the dyeing of animal fibers; and the basic or tannic colors are mostly substituted ammonias, and are used in calico-printing and gingham-dyeing. The direct cotton or Kongo colors are dyes that may be used without mordants. Monogenetic colors are those from which only one hue can be produced, while polygenetic colors are those from which different hues can be formed when different mordants are employed. Colors are also classed according to (1) the color-compounds which they resemble or from which they are derived and (2) the organic groups which they contain. Some of these classes are the acridine colors, alizarin c. (artificial mordant dyes allied to alizarin), anthracene c., azo c. (see AZO-DYE), benzidine c., diazo c., Janus c. (a class of dyes which contain the sulfonic acid, azo, and amido groups), monoazo c., nitroso c., oxazin c., oxyketone c., phthalic anhydride c. (such as the eosins), stilbene c., sulfid or sulfur c. (formed by fusing certain coal-tar products with sodium sulfid, thiosulfates, or sulfur), sulfone c., tetrakisazo c., thiazin c., triazo c., and xanthene c.

Three attributes of any color, as: (1) hue, or tone, by which varying tints are distinguishable; (2) luminosity, by which tints differ in respect to "light" and "dark" values; (3) intensity, by which colors otherwise alike differ in limpid purity. —c-curve, n. A curve indicating the different focal lengths of telescopic object-glasses for the rays of various wave lengths. —c-defective, n. One partially or totally color-blind. —c-dia-gram, n. A systematic arrangement of colors, generally in such manner that compound colors shall lie on the straight line joining their primaries. Called, according to its shape, c-circle, c-triangle, etc. —c-disk, n. A disk slit on one side from the periphery to the center for use in a color-wheel. See COLOR-WHEEL. —c-doctor, n. In calico-printing, a blade for wiping surplus color from the engraved roll. —c-filter, n. Same as c-SCREEN. —c-guard, n. [U. S. A.] A guard for the protection of the colors. In each regiment it consists of two color-sergeants who are the color-bearers (the senior color-sergeant carrying the national color; the junior color-sergeant, the regimental color), and two experienced soldiers are picked by the colonel. —c-hearing, n. Med. A condition in which color-sensations and acoustic sensations are habitually associated. —c-index, n. Hemat. A guide for determining the amount of hemoglobin present in a blood-corpuscle. —c-line, n. 1. The distinction drawn between white persons and those of negro blood. 2. Psychophysics. The outline of a plane figure, or any straight line joining two points in a solid figure, which is designed to give a diagrammatic representation of color-sensations and their interrelations. 3. pl. A series of fine parallel lines on any part of a heraldic device denoting the tincture by their direction. —c-maker, n. [ENG.] A maker or seller of paints or colors. —c-mixer, n. An apparatus for mixing colors by means of a color-wheel. See SPECTRUM. —c-mixture, n. Combination of fundamental colors into another color. —c. of office (Law), a pretense or false appearance of authority for an act done on the part of a de-facto officer. —c. of title (Law), an apparent, but not valid, title to property, especially under a written instrument. —c-pan, n. A shallow lined vessel in which colors are mixed for cotton-printing. —c-party, n. A party having charge of the colors of a British regiment. —c-photography, n. The photographic reproduction of things in their natural colors: (1) theoretically by the direct action of light upon a negative; (2) practically, thus far, by the combination of negatives made through complementary color-screens, the three-color process, or as a positive on glass by the screen-plate process, as lumiere, omnicolor, etc. —c-plate, n. Photoengraving. One of a series or set of plates, each representing a certain portion of a picture, intended to be printed in different colors in combination: a stimulation of lithographic work. —c-screen, n. Photog. A sheet of glass, or other transparent material, absorbing a certain definite portion of the spectrum, through which only complementary rays pass to the negative. —c-slab, n. A piece of white porcelain on which the colors used in painting porcelain are burned: used as a guide, to indicate the effect of firing on colors. —c-standard, n. Colors standardized. See SPECTRUM. —c-striker, n. [ENG.] A color-maker. —c-tone, n. See TONE, 10, 11, 12. —c-top, n. A top painted on some or all of the spokes of the spectrum, showing the effect of their combination during its rotation. —c-variation, n. The range of variability in color within the limits of a species. —c-variety, n. Zool. A variety distinguished from the typical form of the species by some constant peculiarity of color. —c-weakness, n. Inability to distinguish colors at a low degree of saturation or intensity. —c-wheel, n. A wheel designed to exhibit the proportion of primary colors in any shade of color. It consists of color-disks bearing primary colors and white and black, constructed so as to revolve within a graduated circle. The disks can be arranged to overlap to any desired extent, and when rapidly rotated convey the impression of the color of this combination. —complementary c., one of two colors when combined produce white or nearly white light, as orange and blue. —dead c., a color that produces no reflections. —express c. (Law), the pleading of a feigned claim of right. —Fechner's colors (Psychophysics), the colors produced by the spectrum-top. —flight of colors (Psychophysics), the series of colored after-images which follow gazing at an intensely bright light. —Implied c. (Law), a claim of right arising from the pleadings of the defense. —Ingrain c., an insoluble color (usually an azo compound, but sometimes an inorganic compound) which has been produced directly in the fiber of the material by a chemical reaction. —Interference colors, iridescent colors resulting from the interference of light. See INTERFERENCE, 2, and QUANTUM, mode c., in textile-dyeing, a subdued shade, such as drab. —Newton's scale of colors, a scale based upon Sir Isaac Newton's observations in color. Compare NEWTON'S RINGS, under RING. —opposite c. (Psychophysics), a complementary color. —oxidation c., a color, as insoluble aniline black, which develops on the surface of calico by the oxidation of the material on which it has been impressed. —primary colors. 1. The principal colors into which white light is separated by a prism, once classified as red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet; the colors of the rainbow. 2. The colors by mixing which any other color may be obtained: given variously, now usually as red, green, and blue or violet, when they are mixed by the color-wheel, etc., and red (crimson), yellow, and blue, when they are mixed as pigments. —principal c. (Psychophysics), a psychological color of the fundamental type, such as red, blue, etc. —raised c., in calico-printing, a color that is brought out by some external agent, as a mordant. —reflection c-mixer, a color-mixer provided with a glass put between two strips of colored paper. The reflection of one strip can be observed upon the image of the other through the glass. —saturated c., a color without admixture of black or white. —steam c., a mordanted color produced and fixed upon various fabrics by means of steam. —to give c., to invest with the appearance of truth or reality; in law, in pleas in confession and avoidance, to admit an apparent right in the opposite party which is then avoided by new matter. —with the colors (Jfl.), serving with the regulars, and not with the reserves.

col'o-rā-blind-ness, 1 kul'er-ā-blind-ness; 2 col'or-ā-blind-ness, n. A defect of vision, usually congenital, found in from three to five per cent. of males and a small portion of females. When total—cases of which are very rare—no distinction of colors is possible, the spectrum appearing to differ from part to part only in brightness. In red-green blindness, the color-tones lying between red and green or between purple and greenish-blue are confused and appear as shades of a single color. In the few cases, mostly pathological, of yellow-blue blindness, the two colors whose distinction is retained are red and green. The vision of the color-blind may therefore be called dichromatic rather than polychromatic, as in normal vision (see under color). The importance of this in the case of railroad and maritime employees has led to recent great improvements in the tests for color-blindness. See DEUTERANOPIA; PROTANOPIA.

Combinations for use of means of communication and transportation make railway service cheap.

R. T. ELT Intro. to Polit. Econ. p. 276. [CHATT. 1889.]

3. Chem. The union of elements in certain fixed proportions, or the compound thus resulting. Math. A group of several things or symbols in which the order of arrangement is indifferent; distinguished from permutation. 5. In organ-playing; (1) The tonal qualities resulting from the simultaneous drawing out of two or more stops. (2) The stops so drawn out. 6. The assembling of the parts, as the sprigs and ground, of lace. 7. (1) Pool. A stroke in which the object-ball is used to drive any third ball into a pocket. (2) Billiards. A stroke similar to the above, by which the third ball is pocketed or makes a carom. 8. (1) The sequence of numbers or letters forming the key symbol of a combination lock. (2) The mechanism operated or set in motion by the sequence. 9. Sports. A bet on two or more successive events on which the odds are calculated cumulatively according to the theory of probabilities. 10. pl. An undergarment in which an undershirt and drawers or a short skirt are combined in one piece. [combinatio (n), < combinare; see COMBINE.] SYN: see CABAL; CONSPIRACY; UNION.—Prep.: the combination of elements into compounds.—back combination (Philos.), that part of a double lens situated next to the focusing screen.—combination button (Organ-building), one of the push-knobs of a section of an organ. c. piston.—c. by volume, or by weight (Chem.), the union of elements according to fixed volumetric or gravimetric proportions, to form definite compounds.—c. car, a car containing compartments for various uses.—c. garment, see COMBINATION, 10.—c. laws (Eng.), acts of Parliament passed in 1799 and 1800 for the repression of every form of trade combination, both of employers and employed; repealed in 1824.—c. lock, see LOCK.—c. room (Eng.), the fellows' smoking-room or wine-room at Cambridge University.—theory of c., that branch of algebra which reasons about the number and kinds of combinations that may be formed from given symbols.—com'bi-na'tion-al, a. Of or pertaining to combination; having the quality of combining.

com'bi-na'tive, 1 kom-bai'nē-tiv or kom'bi-nē'tiv; 2 cōm'bi-na'tiv, †. Relating to or affecting combination; tending to combine. 2. Math. Designating those branches of algebra which depend on the theory of combinations.

com'bi-na'tor'ic, 1 kom-bai'nā'tōr'ik; 2 cōm'bi-nā'tōr'ic, n. A branch of mathematics treating of the formation, enumeration, and properties of partitions, variations, combinations, and permutations of a finite number of elements under various conditions.

com'bi-na'tor'ic, 1 kom-bai'nā'tōr'ik; 2 cōm'bi-nā'tōr'ic, n. Math. A department of mathematics treating of the formation, enumeration, and properties of partitions, variations, combinations, and permutations of a finite number of elements under various conditions.

com'bine, 1 kom-bin; 2 cōm-bin, v. [

There are realities which it is impossible to combine in one subject. CAIRD Kant vol. i, p. 124. [MACR. 1885.]

2. To bind.

II. i. 1. To become one, or parts of the same whole; coalesce; be closely allied; associate for a purpose or in a work; cooperate; as, to combine against the saloon.

2. To unite by affinity; enter into chemical combination; as, oxygen and hydrogen combine to form water. [combinare, < L. com (< cum), together, + bin; see BINARY.] SYN: see AGREE; CONCENTRATE; MIX.—Prep.: the acid combines with the alkali; the acid and alkali are combined in a salt; combine the factions into a party.

com'bine, 1 kom-bin; 2 cōm-bin, n. [Colloq. U. S.] A combination of persons, especially a union to effect, by underhanded dealings, what honest efforts, openly employed, can not obtain; cabal; conspiracy; by act of Congress, July 2, 1890, a combination, in the form of a trust or otherwise, to raise prices, or to obstruct the ordinary course of trade.

Com-bre'tum, 1 kom'brētum; 2 cōm'brētūm, n. Bot. A large genus of shrubs, or rarely trees, of the myrobalan family, several of which are in greenhouse cultivation for their brilliant flowers. [Lat., a kind of rush.]

com-bu'rent, 1 kom'būr'ent; 2 cōm'būr'ent, a. Undergoing or causing combustion. [comburens, ppr. of comburo, burn up.]

com-bur'gess, 1 kom'būr'jes; 2 cōm'būr'jēs, n. Old Eng. bur, a burrow; hence, a burrow; a fellow burgess.

com-bust', 1 kom'bust'; 2 cōm'bust', n. 1. [Humorous.] To consume with fire; burn up. 2. To inflame; excite greatly.

com-bust'f, a. 1. Astrol. Obscured by proximity to the sun; extinguished by the sun's light. 2. Burnt; consumed; adust.—combust way (Astrol.), the area included in Scorpio and the second half of Libra.

com-bus'ti-bl(e), 1 kom'bust'bi-bl; 2 cōm'bust'bi-bl, a. 1. That may be set on fire and burned; susceptible of combustion; as, paper, wood, and coal are highly combustible. 2. Easily excited to violence or passion; fiery; inflammable; as, a very combustible temper. [F., < L. combustus; see COMBUSTION.] com-bus'tious;

com-bus'tu-oust.—com-bus'ti-bl(e)-ness, n. The quality of being combustible. com-bus'ti-bl'ity.

com-bus'ti-ble, n. Any substance that will readily ignite and burn; as, pitch, coal, and other combustibles.

com-bus'tion, 1 kom'būs'chōn; 2 cōm'būs'chōn, n. 1. The action or operation of burning; in science, the continuous combination of a substance with certain elements, as oxygen, chlorine, etc., accompanied by the generation of light and heat. 2. Cremation. 3. Any furious outbreak of excitement or passion, as of a mob; disturbance; tumult.

All Virginia was in combustion. The standard of liberty was reared in every county; there was a general cry to arms.

INVING Washington vol. i, p. 399. [G. P. 1863.]

3. Astrol. Position near the sun. 4. Inflammation. [F., < LL. combustio (n), < L. combustus, ppr. of comburo, burn up.] com-bus'ture. SYN: see FIRE.

Bunsen's combustion-furnace, a contrivance by means of which very high temperatures can be secured and the ultimate analysis of organic substances determined.

—combustion chamber, n. Mech. 1. The space in a boiler above the burning coal where the gases burn before passing through the tubes. 2. In an internal-combustion engine, the chamber in the cylinder in which the compression and burning of the charge occurs.—c. method (Chem.), a method used in ascertaining the quantity of hydrogen, carbon, etc., in a substance by burning it with air, oxygen, copper oxide, or other solid oxidizing compound, and by collecting the gases resulting; used in quantitative analysis and in ascertaining the amount of carbon in iron and steel.—c. tube, n. Chem. A glass tube especially designed to withstand great heat as produced by the combustion method.—internal c. (Mech.), the method of operation of a common type of engine, including those in use on automobiles and motor-boats, in which the piston is actuated by the expansion of a gaseous substance burned within the cylinder. These engines are mostly explosion motors, including the gas-engine and the ordinary gasoline engine, but the type includes also such engines as the Diesel motor, in which the working substance is burned more gradually.—spontaneous c., the oxidation of a substance with such rapidity as to engender heat sufficient to ignite it, as masses of oiled rags, pyritous ores, coal, and certain metals.

Spontaneous combustion may take place in some kinds of vegetable and mineral substances, but not in the animal body, living or dead. A. S. TAYLOR Medical Jurisprudence ch. 34, p. 301. [A. S. 1866.]

—supporter of c., a gaseous element capable of sustaining the combustion of a burning substance.

com-bus'tive, 1 kom'bust'iv; 2 cōm'bust'iv, a. 1. com-bus'tiv, †. Relating to or of the nature of combustion. 2. Combustible.

comb'y, 1 kom'y; 2 cōm'y, a. 1. Geol. Having a formation like honeycomb; favose. 2. Made up of bands or layers of crystals arranged crosswise of the bands; said of mineral veins.

comd, abbr. See ABBREVIATION.

come, 1 kom; 2 cōm, v. [CAME; COME; COM'ING.] I. i. 1. cum, †. com'pass-es, 1 kum'pas-es; 2 cöm'pas-es, n. pl. An instrument consisting of two (sometimes more) branches or legs, usually pointed, and joined at the top by a pivoted joint or a spring, used for taking or marking measurements, subdividing distances, describing circles or curves, etc. Some compasses are named from their construction or uses, others from their inventors; as, beam compasses (the points slide on a rod), bow or bow-spring c. (having usually, instead of a joint, an elastic curved strip between the legs), bullet, club, or cone c. (having in place of the point, on one foot a ball or cone), caliper-c. (see CALIPER), elliptic or oval c. (for drawing ellipses), half c. (of very delicate adjustment) millwright's c. (used in dressing millstones), Napier's c. (having folding legs, one with a pivoted pencil and a point, the other a pen and a point), pillar c. (in one arm of which a pen or pencil may be inserted), proportional, bisecting, double, or whole-and-half c. (X-shaped pair of stepping dividers with two pairs of points, which spread to extents proportionate to their distances from the common pivot, which latter is usually adjustable so as to vary the proportion), quadrant c. (having a quadrant arc and binding screw), rack c. (with a rack adjustment), scriber c. (having one leg sharp-pointed and the other hooked), solar c. or solar attachment (attached to the theodolite, enabling the observer to ascertain the true meridian by setting the sights upon the sun), triangular c. (having three sharp-pointed legs united at a common point: for stepping off the relative positions and distances of three points, as in map-plotting, etc.), tube c. (resembling Napier's, but with extensible tubular legs), universal c. (with hollow adjustable legs, each having a bow compass which may be used independently or as a part of the large compass), volute c. (whose legs can be expanded so as to admit of drawing a spiral), Weber's c. (an asthesiometer), wing c. (having an arc and a set-screw). com'pass-ing, i. A. Curving; incurvated; as, the compassing arbors. com'pas'sion, 1 kem-pash'an; 2 cöm-pash'on, ri. To com'pas'sion, n. 1. Sorrow or pity, with desire to help or to spare, excited by the suffering or distress of another or others; sympathy with pain or sorrow that prompts one to relieve; commiseration.

By compassion we make another's misery our own; and so, by relieving them, we relieve ourself. Chaucer T. I. 14. 78.

T. Brown Religio Medici bk. 417. [n. a. p. 1852.]

2. Participation in suffering; also, any sorrow or sorrowful emotion. [F. < LL. compassio(n), < compassus, pp. of compari, < L. com- (< cum), together, + pati, suffer.] com'pas'sion-ate. Syn.: see MERCY; PITY.

com-pra-c'ion, 1 kom-pra-k'ion; 2 côm-pra-c'ion, n. [Archeol.] A joint petition or supplication; a praying together.

com-pre-hend, 1 kom-pri-hend; 2 côm-pri-hend, v. I. 1. To include, contain, or take in, either literally, figuratively, or by implication; comprise; enclose; encompass. 2. To lay hold of or take in with the mind so as to have an adequate conception of; grasp mentally; have full knowledge of, as distinguished from apprehend; understand; as, to comprehend the meaning of a term; man apprehends God, but can not comprehend Him.

To comprehend is to have a complete and exhaustive knowledge of an object. It is to understand its nature and its relations. C. H. Johnson Systematic Theology, ch. 1, p. 182.

3. To accomplish; catch; overtake. 4. To sum up.

com-pre-hend, 1 kom-pri-hend; 2 côm-pri-hend, v. I. 1. To take hold, as a growing graft. [L. comprehendere, < com (< cum), together, + prehendere, seize.] com-pre-hend'e†; com-pre-hend'er, n.

Syn. see APPREHEND; CATCH; CONTAIN; EMBRACE; GRASP; KNOW.

com-pre-hen'si-ble, 1 kom-pri-hen'si-bl; 2 côm-pri-hen'si-bl, a. 1. Capable of being comprehended or grasped by the mind; intelligible; conceivable. 2. [Rare or Obs.] Capable of being comprised. [L. comprehensibilis, < comprehensio, pp. of comprehendere; see COMPREHEND.] com-pre-hen'si-bl'er†; com-pre-hen'si-bl'i-ty, n. The state or quality of

com-pre-hen'sion, 1 kom-pri-hen'shan; 2 côm-pri-hen'shon, n. 1. The act, process, or result of grasping ideas, facts, etc., with the mind, or the power of doing so; ability to know; understanding; as, to attain a full comprehension of a fact. 2. The act or state of including, containing, or taking in; inclusion; as, the comprehension of many facts in a statement. 3. Comprehensiveness. 4. Logic. Content. 5. Rhet. Synecdoche. 6. Ecol. Hist. The principle or policy of including all Christians within one church organization. 7. A summary or epitome. [L. comprehensio (n.), < comprehensio, pp. of comprehendere; see COMPREHEND.] Syn. see CONCEPTION; KNOWLEDGE.

com-pre-hen'sive, 1 kom-pri-hen'siv; 2 côm-pri-hen'siv, a. 1. Comprehending or capable of comprehending a great number of objects or a wide range of thoughts, etc.; large in scope or content; including much; marked by breadth of views, mental grasp, sympathies, or the like.

The notions of Dryden were formed by comprehensive speculation. Johnson Lives of the Poets vol. iii. p. 115. [s. n. 1854.] 2. Having the power of fully understanding or comprehending; as, a comprehensive intellect. 3. Biol. Combining the characteristics of various diverse types; synthetic. 4. Logic. Of or pertaining to the complete understanding of class characteristics; intensive.—com-pre-hen'sive type (Paleon.), a homogeneous organism of a remote geological period whose characteristics are represented in later periods in differentiated, heterogeneous groups. generalized type. [L. comprehensivus, < comprehensio, pp. of comprehendere; see COMPREHEND.] com-pre-hen'siv†, ad.—com-pre-hen'siv'e-ness, n.—com-pre-hen'sor†, n. One who comprehends.

com-prend†, v. To comprehend.

com-pres-by-ter, n. A fellow presbyter.—com-pres-by-ter'i-al, a. Of or pertaining to a body of presbyters.

com-press, 1 kom-pres; 2 côm-pres, v. 1. To press together or into smaller space; reduce in size or volume; condense, or make more firm and solid by or as by pressure; compact; concentrate; as, to compress gas.

In the case of the Coast Range every two or two and a half miles of original breadth has been compressed into one mile. Jos. Le Conte Compend of Geology pt. ii. ch. 5, p. 228. [A. 1886.] 2. Surg. To close, as a wound, by compression. 3. [Archeol.] To keep under restraint; repress. 4. To put under the influence of compressed air. 5. To embrace carnally. [L. compressus, pp. of comprimere, < com (< cum), together, + premo, press.] Syn. see ABBREVIATE; CONCENTRATE.

com-press, 1 kom-pres; 2 côm-pres, n. 1. Any device used in compressing. (1) Med. (a) A soft pad, as of folded linen or of lint, for making local pressure. (b) A wet cloth covered with oiled silk or other envelop, applied to the body, as to lessen inflammation. (2) An apparatus for compressing bales of cotton, etc. 2. [Colloq., Southern U. S.] A cotton-baling establishment. [F. compresser, < L. compressus; see COMPRESS, v.]

com-pressed†, 1 kom-pres't; 2 côm-pres't, pa. 1. Compressed. 2. Pressed together or into smaller compass; made compact; condensed by or as by pressure; as, compressed lips. 3. Biol. Flattened laterally; reduced in breadth; opposed to depressed. 3. Bot. Flattened, especially laterally.—compressed air, air reduced in volume by pressure, so that its expansive force can be utilized.—com-press-ed-ly, ad.

com-press'i-bil'i-ty, 1 kom-pres'i-bil'i-ti; 2 côm-pres'i-bil'i-ty, n. The quality of being compressible; that property by virtue of which the volume of a body may be lessened by compression. com-press'i-ble-ness†.

In liquids it was long believed that there was no compressibility, but in reality liquids possess this property to a greater extent than solids. B. STELLMAN, Jr., Physics pt. i. ch. 2, § 21, p. 11. [u. m. & co.]

com-press'i-ble, 1 kom-pres'i-bl; 2 côm-pres'i-bl, a. com-press'i-bl†, a. Capable of being compressed, or pressed into smaller compass; also, disappearing under pressure; as, a compressible pulse.

com-press'i-cau-date, 1 kom-pres'i-kô-dê; 2 côm-pres'i-cau-dât, a. Having the tall compressed. [L. compressus (see COMPRESS, v.) + cauda, tail.]

com-pres'sion, 1 kom-pres'hon; 2 côm-pres'hon, n. 1. The act of compressing, or the state of being compressed. By what process of compression did the great soul of Wilberforce get into a frame so slender? W. M. FURNSSON Lectures and Sermons, Macaulay p. 43. 2. Constraint, as by force or authority; repression. 3. Condensation of thought or language in writing. 4. Astron. & Geol. The deviation of a planet in shape from a perfect sphere; ellipticity. 5. Mech. The total change in shape of any substance resulting from pressure. 6. Engin. The plugging of a caisson. [L. compressio (n.), < compressus; see COMPRESS, v.]—com-pres'sion-cham-ber, n. A compartment of an apparatus the volume of which may be increased or diminished by the action of a piston.—c. cock, n. See COCK.—c. coupling, n. A shaft-coupling by means of which sections of driving-shaft are accurately joined end to end, split cones on the ends effecting the union.—c. curve, n. A diagrammatic curve which shows the pressures existing in the cylinders of an engine.—c. cylinder, n. 1. Same as AIR-COMPRESSOR. 2. A cylinder in which air under pressure receives and neutralizes impact or shock, thus serving as an air-spring.—c. machine, n. 1. Any apparatus for compressing air, liquids, or other substances. 2. An instrument by means of which the physical constants of gases are determined. 3. An apparatus for determining the compressive strength of various substances.—c. member, n. Engin. Any part of a frame of the brain, that condition of the brain which is induced by rupture of a blood-vessel, fracture of the skull, pressure of a blood-clot, or growth of a tumor within the skull. The most common symptom is coma.—c. of the poles (Astron.), the oblateness or ellipticity of the earth or any other planet. See ELLIPTICITY.—c. slope, n. Ordnance. The conform diminution of the bore of a rifle adjacent to the powder-chamber, used for condensing the soft band of the projectile.—c. small valve, n. Mech. In a gasoline engine, a small valve in the cylinder-head by which a portion of the charge is allowed to escape, preventing compression.—c. valve, n. See VALVE.—Initial c. (Mech.), the compression to which a built-up gun is subjected when bound with wire or hoops shrunk on.—Isothermal c., reduction in the volume of a fluid without any change in its temperature.—com-pres'sion-al, a. Of, pertaining to, or producing compression.

com-pres'sive, 1 kom-pres'iv; 2 côm-pres'iv, a. 1. Compressing, pressing, tending to or having power to compress.—com-pres'siv(e)-ness†, ad.

com-pres'sor, 1 kom-pres'or; 2 côm-pres'or, n. One who or that which compresses. Specif.: (1) Anat. muscle that causes Air-compressor for furnishing air in mines, caissons, etc. a, air-cylinder; b, pressure-indicator; c, oiler; s, air; t, safety-valve.

sion; as, the compressor of the ostrife. (2) A machine apparatus for compressing air, gases, or other such as hay or cotton. (3) An instrument for applying pressure to, or for compressing, a limb in surgical cases. (4) A device for producing a graduated pressure upon an object under microscopic examination. com-pres'sor-i-um†, n. (5) Naut. A lever for checking the lining out of a chain cable. (6) A device for holding a carriage to its slide to check recoil. [L. < compressus see COMPRESS, v.] com-pres'ser†.

com-print, 1 kom-print; 2 côm-print, v. [Rare.] Ecol. Hist. To print concurrently (as with the King's Printer) the right of comprinting privileged books was possessed by the 17th century by the King's Printer, the Company, and the university presses. [com + print]. com-pri'sal, 1 kom-pri'sal; 2 côm-pri'sal, n. [Rare.] The act or fact of comprising; inclusion; an epitome.

com-prise, 1 kom-pri'z; 2 côm-pri'z, v. [PRISED—PRISING.] 1. To comprehend summarily or collectively; include and cover; consist of; embrace. 2. To bring within its own or a specified limit. 3. To attach for debt. 4. To compress. [F. compriser, pp. of comprendre, < L. comprehendere; see COMPREHEND.] Syn. see CONTAIN; EMBRACE.—com-prise'†, or priz'a-bl(e)†, a.

com-pri'sor, 1 kom-pri'zar or -zer; 2 côm-pri'zor, n. Law. One who attaches property.

com-pro-bate, v. To prove jointly; concur; confirm.

com-pro-duce, v. To produce simultaneously or together.—com-pro-duc'tion†, n.—com-pro-duc'tiv(e)s†, a.

com-pro-mise, 1 kom-pro-miz; 2 côm-pro-miz, v. com-pro-mizes, 1 kom-pro-miz; 2 côm-pro-miz, v. I. To adjust or settle by mutual concessions; compound; as, to compromise a lawsuit. 2. To endanger the interests or reputation of; expose to risk, suspicion, or scandal; commit, as to a hazardous course; compromit; as, to compromise one's reputation.

If a reception is going to compromise our position in the future I wish you would tell me. E. EGLESTON Faith Doctor p. 80. [A. 1891.]

3. To bind or pledge mutually.

II. 1. To make a settlement, by mutual concessions, as by a partial surrender of claims, purposes, or principles.

To construct definitely in the mind; engender; originate; as, to conceive a campaign. 4. To believe or suppose; think; fancy: used often to express an opinion modestly.

These meanings are united by the psychological fact that the mental representation may be more or less schematic, according to the character and practical uses of the object and the past experience of the conceiving mind.

The three most eminent masters of the art of ridicule, during the eighteenth century, were, we conceive, Addison, Swift, and Voltaire. MACAULAY Essays, Addison p. 609. [a. s. & co. 1854.]
 5. To have formed in the womb as an embryo; become pregnant with. 6. To express in a particular way; formulate; as, the petition was badly conceived. 7. [Archaic.] To grasp the meaning of; understand; as, I do not conceive him. 8f. To develop or acquire; breed; catch. 9f. To include; comprise. 10f. To perceive by the senses; observe.

II. i. 1. To form a mental image; have an idea or ideas; form a conception or notion; think; imagine; followed by of. 2. To generate a new being in one's womb; begin to develop an embryo. [< OF. concever, < L. concipio, < con- (< cum), together, + capto, take.] con-ceive-ty. Syn.: see APPREHEND. — Prep.: of- — con-celiv'er, n.

con-cel-jal, 1 kōn-thē-hāl; 2 cōn-thē-hāl, n. [Sp.] [P. I.] [-LES, 1 -JES; 2 -LES, pl.] In the Philippines, a municipal councilor.

con-cent', tr. To cause to harmonize. — con-cent'iv(e), a. con-cent', 1 kon-sent'; 2 cōn-cēt', n. 1. [Archaic.] Concord or harmony; particularly of sounds. 2f. Agreement; consistency. [< L. concentus; see CONCENTUS.] con-cent'.

con-cent'er, 1 kon-sen'ter; 2 cōn-cēn'ter, v. I. t. To con-cent'er, tr. direct or bring to a common point or center; focus. II. i. To come together at a common center; unite in one object; focus; combine. [< F. concentrer, < L. con- (< cum), with, + centrum; see CENTER.]

con-cent'erd, pp. Concentrated. S. S. con-cent'ed, 1 kon-sen'ted; 2 cōn-cēn'ted, n. [It.] Musical. The simultaneous sounding of the notes of a chord; harmony; opposed to arpeggio.
con-cent'ral-iz-a-tion, 1 kon-sen'tral-iz-ā-shon; 2 cōn-cēn'tral-iz-ā-shon, n. [Rare.] The act of centering, or the state of being concentrated.

con'cen-trate, 1 kon-sen-trēt or kon-sen'trēt; 2 cōn'cēn-trāt or cōn-cēn'trāt (XIII), v. [-TRAT'; -TRAT'ING.]
 I. t. 1. To draw or direct to or toward a common center; concentrate; focus; as, to concentrate troops; to concentrate one's energies; to concentrate attention. 2. Chem. To intensify in strength or to purify by the removal, as in evaporation, of valueless or unneeded constituents; condense; intensify. 3. Mining. To separate (ore or metal) from its containing rock or earth.

II. i. To converge or gather toward a center; become unified, compacted, or intensified; grow stronger; as, the army concentrated; the lye concentrates. [< CON- + L. centrum; see CENTER.] Syn.: assemble, centralize, combine, compact, compress, condense, congregate, consolidate, convene, converge, draw together, focus, gather, mass, muster, reduce. — Ant.: dilute, disperse, evaporate, expand, liquefy, spread, scatter. — concentrated feed (Agri.), any form of fodder or food, rich in nitrogenous elements and containing a relatively smaller proportion of fibrous matter and water than coarse fodder or "long feed." To this class belong cowpeas, gluten-meal, cottonseed-meal, oil-cake, and the various grains fed to cattle. Compare FOUNDER.

con-cent-rate, n. A product of a process of concentration, as in chemistry or metallurgy.

con'cen-tration, 1 kon-sen'trē-shon; 2 cōn'cēn-trā-shon, n. 1. The act or process of concentrating; said especially of focusing the attention upon a single object or small group of objects. 2. The product or result of concentrating; that which is concentrated.

War is the concentration of all human energies.

CHANNING Works, War p. 688. [a. v. a. 1833.]

3. Biol. The tendency of descendants to exhibit hereditary characteristics at an earlier stage of growth than their ancestors. 4. Mining. The removal of the less valuable parts of ore preparatory to smelting. 5. In Herbartian philosophy, the gradual apprehension of the manifold. — con'cen-tration-cell, n. Elec. A source of electromotive force whose difference of potential is derived from the varying degree of concentration of the solutions in which its poles are set. — dry c. (Mining), the concentration of ore by means of dry concentrates or magnets as opposed to the use of water. — ionic c. (Phys. Chem.), the quantity of gram-atoms of an ion contained in the unit volume of a solution. — molecular c. (Phys. Chem.), in a dissolved substance, the ratio between the number of molecules of the substance and of the solvent in a given volume. — con'cen-tration-list, n.

con-cen'tra-tive, 1 kon-sen'trā-tiv; 2 cōn-cēn'trā-tiv, con-cen'tra-tiv, a. Tending to or characterized by concentration. — con-cen'tra-tiv(e)-ness, n. The quality of concentrating; especially, in phenomenology, the faculty of fixing one's entire attention upon a single subject.

con-cen'tra-tor, 1 kon-sen'trē-tor or -tor; 2 cōn-cēn'trā-tor, n. A person or thing that concentrates. Specific. (1) A wire frame or the like for shot, placed in a cartridge to insure close shooting; used chiefly in trap-shooting. (2) A ferrule or tube for the muzzle of a shotgun, to reduce the orifice and so prevent the scattering of the shot when discharged. (3) In mining, a machine or device used to concentrate or separate ore. — belt concentrator (Mining), a machine in which the work of concentrating is accomplished by an inclined endless belt, over which the crushed ore passes, while the frame is constantly shaken by mechanical means. — centrifugal c. (Mining), a machine in which centrifugal force is used for the concentration of minerals.

con-cen'tric, 1 kon-sen'trik; 2 cōn-cēn'tric, I. a. 1. Having a common center, as spheres or circles; said loosely of any curves that are parallel or nearly so.

We find the valley crossed at various distances by concentric moraines.

AGASSIZ Geol. Sketches p. 8. [o. & co. 1876.]
 2. Mpl. Concentrated; as, a concentric fire. — con-cen'tric-al; con-sen'trict. II. n. [Rare.] One of a number of concentric bodies or circles. [< LL. concentricus, < L. con- (< cum), with, + centrum; see CENTER.] — con-cen'tric-al-ly, adv. — con-cen'tric-ity, n. The state of being concentric.

con-cen'tus, 1 kon-sen'tus; 2 cōn-cēn'tus, n. 1. Accordance in sound; harmony. 2. Old Eccl. Mus. The portion of a church service sung by the whole choir. Compare ACCENTUS. [L., harmony, < concino, sing together, < con- (< cum), together, + cino, sing.] — con-cen'tu-al, con-cen'tu-ous, a.
Con-cen'tion, 1 kon-sen'tyon; 2 cōn-cēp-cyon, n. 1. A province in Chile, 3,535 sq. m. 2. Its capital city. 3. A town in Paraguay. 4. One of the Visaya Islands, P. I. 5. Its capital. 6. A town in Tarlac province, Luzon, P. I.

con'cept, 1 kon-sept; 2 cōn-cēpt, n. 1. Psychol. A so-called general (or generalized) notion or highly schematized idea, formerly supposed to embrace all the attributes common to the individuals that make up a class; distinguished both from the fantasm or image and from the percept, which are individual and concrete, while the concept is general and relatively abstract. One of the most hotly contested problems of modern psychology is to determine how far imageless thought is possible.

The concept should represent the real essence of the objects included under it. HERTZ Philos. tr. by Morris, vol. 1, § 47. 151. [a. 1872.]

2. In a looser and less proper use, any notion in which elements are combined into the idea of one object. [< L. conceptus; see CONCEIVE, n.] Syn.: see CONCEPTION; IDEA. — classic concept, the notion in the mind of the naturalist or taxonomist in accordance with which he classifies persons or things, as when he arranges men by locality, by language, by nationality, or by the character of the hair. — con'cept-ful, ing, n. Psychol. The characteristic feeling which results from being aware of the merely symbolical value of the concept-idea. — c. idea, n. Psychol. An idea having only a relative or symbolical value, a step in the process toward the formation of the logical concept. — conceptual idea, general c. (Logic), an idea or conception of a multiplicity of objects possessing common characteristics as representing a whole or class. — general idea; general notion.

con-cep'ta-cle, 1 kon-sep'ta-kl; 2 cōn-cēp'ta-cl, n. con-cep'ta-cl, f. Bot. (1) A special cavity developed on the surface of many algae and fungi, in which reproductive bodies are produced. (2) A sporangium of ferns. (3) A foliicle or double foliicle. 2f. That in which anything is contained; a receptacle. [< L. conceptaculum, < conceptus; see CONCEIVE, n.] con'cep-ta-cu-lum, con'cep-ta-cu-lar, a. Consisting of or relating to a conceptacle. — neutric conceptacle (Bot.), same as CYPRIDIOSTOMA. — sterile c.; vegetative c.

con-cep'tion, 1 kon-sep'shon; 2 cōn-cēp'shon, n. 1. The act or process of forming the schematized idea or notion of a thing, or the idea or notion formed; as, great beyond conception; a correct conception. 2. Psychol. The faculty or mental power employed in forming concepts or so-called general notions, by selecting and recognizing the common attributes and relations, especially as distinguished from perception, the cognition of particulars; primarily a form of the comparative faculty. See COMPARATIVE.

Conception is the act of grasping together two or more attributes into the unity of thought, which we call a single concept.

F. BOWEN Modern Philos. p. 20. [s. 1877.]

3. Any idea or notion, or thought-formation, whether accompanied with belief in the reality of its object or not; as, the conceptions of the imagination; the conceptions of the memory; the conceptions of the reason. 4. Philos. The universal wherever found, whether in self-consciousness, direct perception, or abstract thought, corresponding somewhat to the Platonic idea. 5. A plan or invention of the mind; a product of the inventive or constructive faculty; as, the conception of a campaign; a brilliantly executed conception. 5f. The impregnation of an ovum; the beginning of pregnancy; hence, figuratively, a commencement; an inception. 6f. A mere fancy; a conceit. [< L. conceptio(n)-, < conceptus, pp. of concipio; see CONCEIVE.] Syn.: apprehension, comprehension, concept, idea, image, notion, perception, sentiment, view. See IDEA. Compare APPREHEND. — Ant.: ignorance, misapprehension, misconception, misunderstanding, oversight, perplexity. — fantom conception (Med.), a neurotic stimulation of the ordinary phenomena of pregnancy, due principally to gas. Compare FANTOM TUMOR. — Immaculate C. (R. C. Theol.), the immunity from original sin divinely granted to the Virgin Mary. The immaculate conception of the Virgin was a matter of controversy from the 12th century, and it was a frequent subject in art; but it was not an accepted dogma until 1854, when it was proclaimed by Pope Pius IX. — con-cep'tion-al, a. Pertaining to or of the nature of a conception. — con-cep'tion-al-ist, n. A conceptualist. — Con-cep'tion-ist, n. R. C. A member of the religious order of the Sisters of the Conception of Our Lady, founded in 1664 by Beatriz de Silva, a branch of the Order of Saint Clare. 2. [< L.] A conceptualist. — con-cep'tious, a. [Archaic.] Apt to conceive; fruitful.

con-cep'tu-al, 1 kon-sep'tu-al or -tiu-al; 2 cōn-cēp'tu-al or -tū-al, a. Of or pertaining to conception or a concept.

con-cep'tu-al-ism, 1 kon-sep'tu-al-izm; 2 cōn-cēp'tu-al-izm, n. Philos. The doctrine, especially identified with Abelard (1079-1142), that general ideas, or concepts, do indeed exist in the mind, but have no corresponding existences in reality; a theory devised to mediate between the extremes of realism and nominalism.

con-cern, 1 kon-surn; 2 cōn-cērn, tr. 1. To pertain, relate, or belong to; be of interest or importance to; have connection with; as, things that concern man's future. 2. To occupy the attention or activity of; engage; busy; occupy; interest; as, to concern oneself with commerce.

Jesus . . . concerned himself with spiritual ideas and influences.

BROADBENT Jesus of Nazareth p. 23. [a. s. 1890.]

3. To affect with concern or anxiety; disturb; trouble: used in the passive or reflexively; as, to concern oneself in charity; to be concerned for one's health: used in the imperative locally in the United States as a euphemistic oath (generally pronounced con-sarn); as, concern you! [< F. concern, < LL. concerno, < L. con- (< cum), with, + cerno, distinguish.] con-cern'. Syn.: affect, impress, interest, move, touch. See PERTAIN. — Prep.: I am concerned about his affairs, at his misfortunes, for his safety; I am not concerned with him in that business; "I am not concerned about the matter" means "I have no anxiety in regard to it"; "I am not concerned in it" signifies "I have no participation in it."

con-cern', n. 1. That which relates to one; an affair; business; especially, something of interest or importance; something affecting one's interest or welfare; as, it is not my concern; each man's concern is his own salvation. 2. A feeling of anxiety or solicitude; interest; regard; as, to have deep concern for the absent.

It is clear that righteousness, the central object of Israel's concern, was the central object of Christ's concern also.

MARRAS Arnold Literature and Dogma p. 92. [o. & co. 1873.]

3. A feeling of obligation to perform a religious duty; used by members of the Society of Friends. 4. A business enterprise, firm, or company; an establishment; also, an estate; as, the Methodist Book Concern; a member of the concern. 5. Any object, contrivance, or appliance: usually conveying a slur; as, a rickety, complicated, and old concern.

HARRIS B. Stowe Olden Folk p. 67. [o. & co. 1869.]

con-cern-an-ty, n. A concern. — con-cern-an-ty, n. con-cern-ed, 1 kon-surn-d; 2 cōn-cērn-d, pa. 1. Having con-cern-d, ing or exhibiting disquietude; interested or involved; anxious. 2. [U. S.] Deuced; damned; a euphemism; that, concerned fool: often pronounced con-sarn-d. 3. [U. S.] Troubled; distressed; grieved. 4. [Dial.] Slightly intoxicated. Syn.: see ANXIOUS. — con-cern-ed-ly, adv. — con-cern-ed-ness, n.

con-cern'ing, prep. In relation to; regarding; pertaining to; about; as, I spoke concerning his duty.

Concerning was originally the present participle of the verb con-cernere, to concern, or reference to. Its use as a preposition is closely analogous to that of touching, respecting, etc.

tion. 5. To control and lead as a director or commander; as, to conduct a concert; to conduct an attack.
II. 1. To act or serve as a conductor or transmitter; as, copper conducts better than iron. 2. To direct or lead, as a musical director; as, the maestro conducts well. 3. To behave; act; as, how did the debutante conduct? [L. conductus; see CONDUCT, n.] con-duct'; con-duct'. Syn.: see GOVERN; INTRODUCE; LEAD; REGULATE.

con-duct', 1 kon'dukt; 2 con'düct, n. 1. The way in which a person acts or lives; the doing or deeds of a person, collectively considered; behavior; deportment; as, conduct befitting a gentleman. 2. The act or process of managing or carrying on; direction; control; administration; as, the conduct of the affair was left to the ambassador.

What is power, But the nice conduct of another's weakness? HENRY BROOKS Gustavus Vasa act iv, sc. 1.
3. Ethics. The voluntary direction of the powers and faculties to appropriate ends, especially as regards morality and religion; as, proper self-conduct is one of the highest moral requirements.

But ethics—first, last and all the time—deals with what is practical, or with doing in the form of human conduct.

4. The action of guiding or leading; escort; convey; guidance; safe-conduct; as, under the conduct of a guide, we left the city. 5. The mode of execution or development; style or way of managing; as, the conduct of a plot in a drama. 6. Dexterous or skillful management; tact or address in action. 7. A conductor; guide; also, a conduit. 8. A passport. 9. Conduct-money. [L. conductus, < L. conductus, pp. of conducere; see CONDUCT, n.] Syn.: see BEHAVIOR; DISPOSAL—con-duct', n. [U. S. Navy.] A book in which the department of the sea is recorded—con-duct', n. A tax that Charles I. of England levied for paying the traveling expenses of the army.

con-duct', 1 kon'dukt; 2 con'düct, n. 1. Elec. Conductive capacity for which the unit is the ohm (ohm spelled backward)—specific conductance (Elec.), the conductance of any particular piece of material one square centimeter in cross-section by one centimeter in length.

con-duct', 1 kon'dukt; 2 con'düct, n. 1. Elec. Conductive capacity for which the unit is the ohm (ohm spelled backward)—specific conductance (Elec.), the conductance of any particular piece of material one square centimeter in cross-section by one centimeter in length.

con-duct', 1 kon'dukt; 2 con'düct, n. 1. Elec. Conductive capacity for which the unit is the ohm (ohm spelled backward)—specific conductance (Elec.), the conductance of any particular piece of material one square centimeter in cross-section by one centimeter in length.

con-duct', 1 kon'dukt; 2 con'düct, n. 1. Elec. Conductive capacity for which the unit is the ohm (ohm spelled backward)—specific conductance (Elec.), the conductance of any particular piece of material one square centimeter in cross-section by one centimeter in length.

con-duct', 1 kon'dukt; 2 con'düct, n. 1. Elec. Conductive capacity for which the unit is the ohm (ohm spelled backward)—specific conductance (Elec.), the conductance of any particular piece of material one square centimeter in cross-section by one centimeter in length.

con-duct', 1 kon'dukt; 2 con'düct, n. 1. Elec. Conductive capacity for which the unit is the ohm (ohm spelled backward)—specific conductance (Elec.), the conductance of any particular piece of material one square centimeter in cross-section by one centimeter in length.

con-duct', 1 kon'dukt; 2 con'düct, n. 1. Elec. Conductive capacity for which the unit is the ohm (ohm spelled backward)—specific conductance (Elec.), the conductance of any particular piece of material one square centimeter in cross-section by one centimeter in length.

con'dy-lure, 1 kon'di-lür; 2 con'dy-lür, n. A talpine insectivore (genus Condylura), as the star-nosed mole of North America. [< Gr. kondylos, knob, + oura, tail.]

cone, 1 kōn; 2 cōn, v. & t. [CONED; CON'ING.] 1. To shape conically; as, the cone tread of a car-wheel. 2. To bear cones. 3. To wind on a cone, as thread.

cone, n. 1. A solid figure that tapers uniformly from a circular base to a point. If the point lies in the perpendicular from the center of the base, the cone is a right cone, otherwise an oblique cone.

Apollonius of Perga... appears to have been the first who perceived that the circle, ellipse, parabola, and hyperbola could be formed by different sections of the same cone.

R. ROUTLEDGE Popular Hist. Science p. 43. [A. & S. 1881.]

2. Geom. Any surface generated by the movement according to any law of an indefinite line one point of which is fixed: an extension including the first definition as a particular case. 3. Bot. A dry multiple fruit (technically a strobile), composed of a dense aggregation of scales arranged symmetrically around an elongated axis and bearing naked seeds on the upper side, as in the pine family.

Like two cathedral towers these stately pines Uplift their frosted summits tipped with cones.

4. A symmetrical mountain-peak; specifically, the tapering mass of ejected material accumulated around a volcanic crater. 5. Same as cone-shell (below).

6. Mech. Any of several conical instruments or parts, as either of the two taper drums in the head-stock of a spinning-mule: called the backing-off and drawing-up cones. 7. Same as cone of the retina. 8. The vent-plug of a firearm. 9. A cone-wheel or stepped pulley. 10. Entom. One of the crystalline conical formations immediately at the back of the corneal facets of the multiple eye of an insect.

figurative and sometimes a half-humorous sense, as the title of an autobiographical sketch; as, the Confessions of an Opium-Eater; the Confessions of a Fervidous Girl.
It literature contains, as it were, the confession which every generation, before it passed away, has made to posterity.

MAX MÜLLER Chips vol. iii, ch. 1, p. 3. [s. 1874.]
2. An acknowledgment of belief (in another); recognition of a relation (to another); as, confession of Christ.
3. Law. A voluntary declaration or acknowledgment by a party against whom some misdeed or default is alleged in respect of such allegation. Judicial confessions are those made before a magistrate or court during actual legal proceedings. Such confessions influence the result of the trial, but can not cause conviction unless substantiated by proof. Extrajudicial confessions are those not made in open court or before a magistrate.

4. A formula of faith; a body of doctrine put forth as the belief of a church or denomination, subscription to which is usually required of the ministers and sometimes of the members of a church; a creed. Some of the more notable confessions of the Christian church are as follows: Baptists—The London Confession of 1689, Philadelphia C. of 1742, and New Hampshire C. of 1833. Congregationalists—In Great Britain, the Savoy C., London, 1658, and the declarations of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, 1833; and in the United States, the Buryal Hill Declaration of Faith, adopted by the National Council of 1865, and the creed and form of admission into the church submitted by a committee of the National Council, 1883. Church of England—The Thirty-nine Articles, 1563-1571. Dutch Church and Dutch Reformed—The Belgic Confession, 1563, and Canons of the Synod of Dort, 1619. Church of Ireland—The Lambeth Articles, 1595. Lutheran Church—The Augsburg Confession, 1530. Methodist Church—Articles of Religion, 1784. Presbyterian Church—The Westminster Confession, 1647.

5. A formula of public worship embodying a general admission of common sinfulness, used in the Roman Catholic, Anglican, and other liturgies. 6. R. C. & Gr. Chs. The contrite acknowledgment to a priest of any mortal sins committed, accompanied with the firm purpose of reform: a part of the sacrament of penance and a condition of absolution. Called in full sacramental or auricular confession.

Confession is legally obligatory in Russia, a strict religious duty in the Roman Catholic Church, and a voluntary practise in the English Church.

In the court of her father the [Anne] had been dead to all that could be urged in favor of transubstantiation and auricular confession. MACBETH England ch. 15, p. 445. [p. s. a. c. 1866.]

7. An organization, as a church or communion, using a confession of faith. 8. The tomb of a martyred Christian; also, an altar over such a tomb, or the basilica in which the altar stood; an altar-tomb confessionalary. They call the crypts and shrines where saints and martyrs are buried in these cathedral confessions. A. D. T. WHITNEY Sights and Insights vol. ii, p. 498. [o. c. 1876.]

[F. < L. confessio (n.), < confess, see CONFESS.]

SYN.: see AVOW.—Augsburg Confession, Augustan C., the confession of faith prepared by Melancthon and presented by the Lutheran princes at the Imperial Diet of Augsburg in 1530; since recognized as the chief symbol of the Evangelical Lutheran Church.—Belgic C., a confession originally drawn up by Guido De Bres, but formally adopted by the Synod of Dort in 1619, and since accepted along with the Heidelberg Catechism as a symbolical book of the Reformed Church of Holland, Belgium, and America.

A member of an evangelical denomination of Christians, principally of the United States and Great Britain, historically identical with the Independents of the latter country, where they are called by either name. Their polity is congregational and their doctrine usually moderately Calvinistic. 2. [c-] An advocate of or believer in congregationalism. 3. Same as INDEPENDENT, n. (1).

con'gre-ga'tive, 1 kən'grē-gā'tiv; 2 cōn'grē-gā'tiv, a. Char- con'gre-ga'tiv, acterized by tendency to congregate or form assemblies, societies, etc.

con'gress, 1 kən'grēs; 2 cōn'grēs, n. 1. An assembly or conference; especially, a formal meeting of persons regarded as representative for deliberation and discussion; specifically, in politics, a meeting of envoys or others possessing plenipotentiary powers, for arbitration or other settlement of international affairs. Among the notable congresses of the world are: Aix-la-Chapelle (Oct. 1, 1818), resulting in the withdrawal of the combined forces of Austria, Prussia, Russia, and England from France; Aras (Sept. 21, 1435), between the King of France and the Duke of Burgundy, the latter abandoning his alliance with England; Berlin (June 13-July 13, 1878), the principal European powers establishing the borders of the southeastern states and dependencies of Europe; Carlsbad (Aug. 6, 1819), the German states establishing the censorship of the press and suppressing the Burschenschaft; Chatillon (Feb. 5, 1814), between the Allies and Napoleon, culminating in the breaking off of negotiations, March 19, 1814; Constantinople (Dec. 23, 1876-Jan. 20, 1877), the proposals of the European powers being rejected by Turkey; Frankfort (Sept. 22, 1863, Oct. 1, 1865, and June 14, 1866), terminating in the defeat of a plan for federal reform in the German states; Hague (May 18-July 29, 1899), resulting in the establishment of the Peace Tribunal, and (June 15-Oct. 15, 1907), the adoption of a resolution in favor of obligatory arbitration in certain cases; Kongo (1884-1885), convening at Berlin and declaring the neutrality of Kongo Free State; Laibach (Jan. 26, 1821), the principal European nations establishing the right of armed intervention in the case of internal political disturbances; Paris (Jan. 16-Apr. 22, 1856), England, France, and Russia agreeing upon terms of peace at the conclusion of the Crimean war; Brysvelt (Sept. 20-Oct. 30, 1697), leading to the agreement between England and France to terminate the wars of Queen Anne; Verona (Oct.-Dec., 1822), the attending representatives of the principal European governments agreeing upon the armed intervention of France in Spain in 1823; and Vienna (Sept., 1814-June, 1815), the monarchs of Austria, Bavaria, Denmark, Prussia, Russia, and the smaller German states settling the affairs of Europe after the Napoleonic wars.

A congress, by the law of nations, is but an appointed meeting for the settlement of affairs between different nations, in which the representatives or agents of each treat and negotiate as they are instructed by their own government. WEEKLY WORKS, Panama Mission in vol. iii, p. 195. [L. n. & co. 1858.]

2. [C-] The national legislative body of the United States.

In United States history three bodies have been known as Congress: (1) the Continental Congress (see phrase below); (2) the Federal Congress, or Congress under the Confederation (1781-1789); and (3) the United States Congress, which held its first session beginning March 4, 1789, on the adoption of the Constitution. Congress consists of two houses—the Senate, comprising two members from each State, chosen by the Legislature for terms of six years, and the House of Representatives, elected by the people of the several States for terms of two years, the number of members from a State depending upon its population. See CONGRESSIONAL; REPRESENTATIVE; SENATE.

With an empire to found and to defend, Congress had not as yet had the disposal of one penny of money.

BANCROFT United States vol. iv, epoch iii, p. 204. [A. 1883.]

3. [C-] [U. S.] The body of Senators and Representatives during any period of two years for which the latter are chosen.

Congresses are numbered consecutively. As the first was chosen in 1788 and met in 1789, the number of any Congress may be found by subtracting 1788 from the year of election or 1789 from the year of meeting, dividing by two, and adding one. Thus, the Congress that met first in 1911 was the 62d Congress. Each Congress has two regular sessions, beginning successively on the first Monday in December. The second necessarily ends on March 3, when the Representatives' term of office expires, and is commonly called the "short" session. The Constitution empowers the President to call an extra session of Congress or of either House.

4. The lower house of the legislature of a South-American republic, also of the Cortes, or national legislature of Spain. [L. congressus, & congressus, pp. of congregator, gather, < con- (< cum), together, & gradior, walk.] SYN.: assembly, convention, convocation, council, diet, legislature, parliament, senate. See ASSEMBLY.

—church congress, an organization for the discussion of matters of church interest, especially, such a body (1) of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, or (2) of the Church of England.—c. boot or galter, a half-shoe or galter covering the ankle, with rubber material at the side to enable it to be drawn on readily.—C. water, mineral water from the Congress Spring, Saratoga, N. Y.—Continental C. (U. S. Hist.), one of three national legislative bodies. (1) A deliberative body, representing all the colonies but Georgia, which remained as an organization meeting in Philadelphia from Sept. 5, 1774, to Oct. 26, 1774. (2) A body representing the thirteen colonies, which met in Philadelphia on May 10, 1775, and adjourned to Lancaster, Dec. 12, 1776. (3) The representative body that met in Baltimore, Dec. 20, 1776, and adjourned March 1, 1781, when the Articles of Confederation went into operation.

—con'gress', cf. [Rare.] 1. To assemble; congregate. 2. To assemble in or be present at a congress.—con'gres-sion, n. 1. [Rare.] A gathering; an encounter. 2. Comparison. 3. Colloquial.—con'gres'sionist, a. Tending to assemble, or to come into encounter.

con'gres'sion-al, 1 kən'grēs'h-an-al; 2 cōn'grēs'h-on-al, a. Of or pertaining to congress; relating to, occurring in, or enacted by a congress, especially (C-) the United States Congress.—Congressional district (U. S.), a section of a State entitled to one Representative in Congress under the act of Jan. 16, 1901. The number of districts corresponds to the number of Representatives returned by the State, the ratio being determined by each decennial census. The Congressional districts are more or less uniform in regard to population, the essentially variable in point of size.—con'gres'sion-al-ist, n. A supporter or adherent of a congress.—con'gres'sion-ist; con'gress-ist.

con'gress-man, 1 kən'grēs-man; 2 cōn'grēs-man, n. [MEX., pl.] A member of the United States Congress; especially, a member of the House of Representatives. con'gress-wo-man, n. A woman member of Congress. Miss Jeannette Rankin, representing Montana, was the first woman in the United States to be elected to Congress (1916).

con'greve, 1 kən'griv; 2 cōn'grēv, n. 1. A variety of friction-match, named from its inventor, Sir William Congreve; short for Congreve match. 2. A military rocket, invented by the same in 1808, and called, in full, Congreve rocket.

con'grī-dē, 1 kən'grī-dē; 2 cōn'grī-dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of encephalophalus eels, especially those with well-developed opercular bones, palatine bones, and preorbital congers. [< CONGRU-; Con-grold; Con-grold de-it.—con'grīd, n.]

con'gro-gad'dē, 1 kən'gro-gad'dē; 2 cōn'gro-gad'dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of anacanthine fishes with submedian anus, ample branchiostegal membrane continuous but free below, and no ventrals. Con'gro-gad'dus, n. (t. g.) [< CONGRU-; Gr. gadōs, fish.]—con'gro-gad'd n.—con'gro-gad'd, a. & n.

con'grold, 1 kən'grōld; 2 cōn'grōld, I. a. Of or pertaining to the Congridae. II. n. One of the Congridae. [< CONGRU- + -oid.]

con'gru-ence, 1 kən'gru-ens; 2 cōn'gru-ēns, n. 1. An act or a condition of agreement or concordance; appropriateness; the conformity of one thing to another.

2. Math. (1) A statement in algebraic language that the difference between two numbers or expressions is divisible by a third number called the modulus. The form is  $X \equiv Y \pmod{m}$ , which means that  $X - Y$  is divisible by  $m$ . (2) Same as CONGRUENCY. 3. [Archaic.] Gram. Syntactical agreement, as of a verb with its subject.

4. Same as CONGRUITY. 2. (2). [< L. congruentia, < congruē (t. s.); see CONGRUENT].—con'gru-ē, cf. To agree.

con'gru-en-cy, 1 kən'gru-en-si; 2 cōn'gru-en-si, n. [-cies, 1 -siz; 2 -cis, pl.] 1. Same as CONGRUENCE, 1.

2. Math. A complex of lines that fulfil two conditions; as, all the possible tangents common to two spheres are a congruency. 3. Logic. The relation of two predicates that can be affirmed of the same subject.

con'gru-ent, 1 kən'gru-ent; 2 cōn'gru-ēnt, a. Having mutual agreement or conformity; correspondent; appropriate. Specif.: (1) Math. (a) Filling exactly the same space; concurrent: applied to figures or solids. (b) Leaving the same remainder when divided by a modulus. See CONGRUENCE, 2 (1). (2) Logic. Having to do with or predicable of the same subject; different from each other, yet true of the same state of things; as, congruent propositions. (3) Gram. Agreeing syntactically. (4) Anat. Fitting into one another: said of opposing teeth. (5) Same as CONGRUOUS, 2 (2). [< L. congruē (t. s.), ppr. of congru, agree.]—con'gru-ent (t. a). Pertaining to congruences.—con'gru-ent-ly, adv.

con'gru-ism, 1 kən'gru-izm; 2 cōn'gru-izm, n. Theol. The doctrine that the efficacy of the grace of God is dependent on and determined by the adaptation of the divine grace to the character, disposition, and will of the person receiving it: especially advocated in the 16th century.—con'gru-ist, n. Ch. Hist. A believer in congruism.—con'gru-ist (t. a). Relating to congruism.

con'gru-ity, 1 kən'gru-iti; 2 cōn'gru-iti, n. [-ties, 1 -tiz; 2 -tis, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being congruous; logical or practical agreement; harmoniousness; appropriateness.

The expressiveness of it [imagery] is measured by its congruity. AUSTIN PUELLER English Style lect. x, p. 140. [L. 1888.]

2. Theol. (1) That receptivity of divine grace assumed in congruism. (2) With the schoolmen, a meritorious fitness for or claim upon the first exercise of divine grace arising from desires or strivings after good. 3. An example or case of harmoniousness or agreement. 4. Gram. Agreement. 5. Geom. Equality. [< F. congruité, < L. congruus; see CONGRUOUS.] SYN.: see HARMONY.

con'gru-ous, 1 kən'gru-us; 2 cōn'gru-ūs, a. 1. Harmoniously related or united; marked by adaptation or agreement; appropriate; consistent.

Impelled by a species of moral gravitation, the inquirer will glide insensibly to the system which is congruous to his disposition. LOCKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. ii, p. 204. [A. 1873.]

2. (1) Math. Having congruence. (2) Geom. That may be superposed so as to be exactly coincident. [< L. congruus, < congruo, agree.] SYN.: see APPROPRIATE.—con'gru-ous-ly, adv.—con'gru-ous-ness, n.

con'gu, n. Same as CONGOU.

con'hy'drine, 1 kən-hi'drin, -drin or -drin; 2 cōn-hi'd-ryne, drin, -drin or -drin, n. Chem. A white poisonous crystalline alkaloid ( $C_8H_7NO$ ) contained in the seeds and leaves of the poison-hemlock. [< CONIUS + HYDROGEN.]

con'ni, 1 kō'ni; 2 cō'ni, n. Plural of CONUS.

con'ni, 1 kō'ni; 2 cō'ni, n. See CONUS.

con'ni-a, 1 kō'ni-a; 2 cō'ni-a, n. Same as CONIN.

con'ni-ah, 1 kō'ni-ah; 2 cō'ni-ah, n. Bib. Jer. xlii, 24.

con'ic, 1 kən'ik; 2 cōn'ic, a. 1. Having the form of a cone; cone-shaped; conical. 2. Relating to or formed by or upon a cone. [< Gr. kōnikos, < kōnos, peak.]—conic section, a curve formed by the intersection of a plane with a right circular cone, a curve of the second degree; as, ellipse, parabola, or hyperbola, according to the inclination of the cutting plane to the axis. See ILLUS.—c. sections, that branch of geometry which treats of the ellipse, parabola, and hyperbola.—c. surface, the surface of a cone.

con'ic, n. A conic section. The eccentricity of a conic is determined by its form. C. A. YOUNG Elements of Astronomy § 257, p. 178. [E. & co. 1890.]

—conjugate conics (Geom.), two concentric conics having the respective polars of any point parallel and at an equal distance from a focus. 2. Two conics, in whose common center—general conic (Geom.), the locus determined by the general equation of the second degree between two variables:  $Ax^2 + 2Hxy + By^2 + 2Gx + 2Fy + C = 0$ .—harmonic conics (Math.), two conics, in whose equations the sum of the products of the corresponding coefficients is 0.—particular c., the curve derived from the general equation for conics, by assigning certain conditions.

con'ic-al, 1 kən'ik-al; 2 cōn'ik-al, a. Shaped like a cone; conic.

That [root] of the carrot, which is thick at the base and tapers gradually to the apex, is called conical.

E. S. BASTIN Elements of Botany pt. i, p. 7. [G. & P. 1888.]

con'ic-al peak, A mountain in Montana; 10,737 ft. high.

con'ic-al-ty, 1 kən'ik-ti; 2 cōn'ik-ti, n. Chem. Any of con'ic-al-ty, a number of synthetic alkaloids ( $C_8H_7NO$ ), similar in composition to conyryl and conin.

con'ic-al-ty, 1 kən'ik-ti; 2 cōn'ik-ti, n. Mineral. A green, hydrous, calcium-copper arsenate,  $(CuCa)_2As_2O_8 \cdot (CuCa)_2O \cdot 2H_2O$ , occurring massive and reniform. [< L. kōnia, powdered lime, + chal-cites; see CHALCITE.]

con'ic-cle, 1 kən'ik-cl; 2 cōn'ik-cl, n. A little cone.

con'ic-co-, 1 kən'ik-kō; 2 cōn'ik-co-. From Greek kōnos, pine-tree or pine-cone; a combining form.—con'ic-co-a-cute, a. Conical with a very sharp point.—con'ic-cylind-rical, a. Nearly cylindrical but tapering.—con'ic-cylind-gate, a. Conical and elongated.

con'ic-cold, 1 kən'ik-kōld; 2 cōn'ik-cōld, n. Math. A quadric surface, or one of the second degree. [< CONIC + -oid.]

con'ic-co-vate, a. Conically ovate.

con'ic-co-sub-u-tate, a. Sharply conical.

con'ic-s, 1 kən'iks; 2 cōn'ics, n. That part of geometry which relates to conic sections.

con'ic-id, 1 kən'ik-id; 2 cōn'ik-id, n. Conch. One of the Conidae. con'ic-id, 1 kən'ik-id; 2 cōn'ik-id, n. pl. Conch. A family of toxoglossate gastropods, especially those with an obconic shell: the cones. See ILLUS. of CONE-SHELL. [< CONUS.]

con'ic-id-um, 1 kō'ni-d-um; 2 cōn'ik-id-um, n. [-i-a, pl.] Bot. In fungi, an asexually produced propagative cell or spore borne upon special branches of the thallus. [< Gr. kōnis, dust.]

con'ic-id-ty, 1 kō'ni-d-ty; 2 cōn'ik-id-ty, n. [-ities, 1 -tiz; 2 -tis, pl.] 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of conidia; conidial. 2. Conidiferous. con'ic-id-ty, 1 kō'ni-d-ty; 2 cōn'ik-id-ty, n. Bearing conidia. con'ic-id-ty, 1 kō'ni-d-ty; 2 cōn'ik-id-ty, n. Like a conidium.

con'ic-id-ty, 1 kō'ni-d-ty; 2 cōn'ik-id-ty, n. Bot. A branch of the mycelium in fungi that bears conidia.

con'ic-fer, 1 kən'ik-fer; 2 cōn'ik-fer, n. Bot. A plant of the pine family (Pinaceae): so called from its bearing cones. [< CONUS, cone, + fero, bear.]

con'ic-fer-er, 1 kō'ni-k-fer-er; 2 cōn'ik-fer-er, n. pl. Bot. A group of resinous mostly evergreen gymnospermous trees now constituting the order Pinaceae. See GINKGOACEAE, PINACEAE, and TAXACEAE.

In the middle geological ages, Coniferae are introduced, the first flowering plant known on earth.

con'ic-fer-in, 1 kō'ni-k-fer-in; 2 cōn'ik-fer-in, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ( $C_{10}H_{12}O_8 + 2H_2O$ ) found in the sap of coniferous trees.

con'ic-fer-ous, 1 kō'ni-k-fer-ous; 2 cōn'ik-fer-ous, a. Cone-bearing; of or belonging to the Pinaceae; containing or composed of conifers; as, coniferous forests.

con'ic-fer-yl, 1 kō'ni-k-fer-yl; 2 cōn'ik-fer-yl, n. Chem. The radical existing in the compound  $HO(C_6H_4)(OCH_3)C_6H_4OH$ . [< CONIFER + -yl.]

con'ic-form, 1 kō'ni-k-ferm; 2 cōn'ik-ferm, a. Having the form of a cone; conical. [< L. conus, cone, + -form.]

con'ic-ly, 1 kō'ni-k-ly; 2 cōn'ik-ly, n. A walled seaport town in Cadiz province, Spain.

con'ic-lu-rus, 1 kō'ni-k-lu-rus; 2 cōn'ik-lu-rus, n. Mamm. A genus of Australian rodents of the family Muridae. [< Gr. kōnitos, for kōnitos, rabbit, + oura, tail.]

con'ic-ma, 1 kō'ni-k-ma; 2 cōn'ik-ma, n. Hyawa gum. See GUM.

con'ic-mene, 1 kō'ni-k-mēn; 2 cōn'ik-mēn, n. Chem. An oily sesquiterpene ( $C_{15}H_{24}$ ) derived from Hyawa gum.

con'ic-nin, 1 kō'ni-k-nin, -nin or -nin; 2 cōn'ik-nin, -nin or -nin, n. Chem. A yellowish, oily, liquid, volatile poisonous alkaloid ( $C_8H_7N$ ) contained in poison-hemlock (Conium maculatum). [< CONIUM.]

con'ic-ny-by, 1 kō'ni-k-ny-by; 2 cōn'ik-ny-by, n. The hero of Disraeli's Contarini, a novel introducing several prominent persons.

con'ic-nix-lo, 1 kō'ni-k-nix-lō; 2 cōn'ik-nix-lō, n. 1. Gilles van (1544-1609), a Flemish painter: "the greatest landscape painter of his time." 2. Jan van (1497- ), a Flemish painter; Life of St. Anne; Christ among the Doctors. con'ic-nix-loy; con'ic-nix-loot.

con'ic-o-, 1 kō'ni-k-o-; 2 cōn'ik-o-, From Greek kōnis, dust; a combining form.—con'ic-o-my-cetes, n. pl. Bot. Dust-fungus: a division of fungi now abandoned and referred to other groups.—con'ic-o-my-cetous, a.—con'ic-op-ter-yg-tid, n. pl. Entom. A family of planipennine neopterans.

con'ic-op-ter-yx, n. (t. g.)—con'ic-op-ter-yg-id, a. & n.—con'ic-op-ter-yg-id, a.—con'ic-lo-sper-mous, a. Having or producing dust-like spores.—con'ic-lo-the-ca, n. [-Cae, pl.] Bot. An anther-lobe.

con'ic-ros-tres, 1 kō'ni-k-ros-tris; 2 cōn'ik-ros-tris, n. pl. Ornith. A division of birds, having cone-shaped beaks, as the finches. [< L. conus (see CONUS) + rostrum; see ROSTRUM.]

con'ic-ros-ter, n.—con'ic-ros-tral, a.

con'ic-ros-ter, 1 kō'ni-k-ros-tris; 2 cōn'ik-ros-tris, n. A village in Yorkshire, England. Con'ic-ros-ter ought.

con'ic-scope, 1 kō'ni-k-skōp; 2 cōn'ik-skōp, n. Same as KONI-SCOPE.

con'ic-tan, 1 kō'ni-k-tan; 2 cōn'ik-tan, n. A lake in N. Lancashire, England; length, 6 1/2 m. con'ic-tet, n. Mineral. An ash-gray or greenish-gray dolomite. con'ic-um, 1 kō'ni-k-um; 2 cōn'ik-um, n. Bot. 1. A small genus of tall, highly poisonous biennial herbs of the parsley family, with decomposed leaves, and compound umbels of white flowers. C. maculatum is the poison-hemlock. 2. The tulip-root but unripe fruit of C. maculatum, containing conin. [< Gr. kōnelon, hemlock, perhaps < kōnos, top.]

con'ic-ty, 1 kō'ni-k-ty; 2 cōn'ik-ty, a. Protec. Geom. con'ic-ty, Designating any two ranges or pencils whose bearers is identical.

con'ic-tur-a-ble, 1 kō'ni-k-tur-[-or -tur]-a-ble; 2 con'ic-tur-a-ble, con'ic-tur-[-or -tur]-a-ble, a. That may be conjectured.—con'ic-tur-a-ble, adv.

con'ic-tur-al, 1 kō'ni-k-tur-al or -tiur-al; 2 cōn'ik-tur-al or -tiur-al, a. 1. Of the nature of or dependent on conjecture; not determined; uncertain; doubtful. 2. Given to conjecturing.

con'ic-tur-al-ist, n. [Rare.] One who conjectures.—

tage of the perception are necessarily connate. SPENCER Principles of Psychol. vol. i, pt. iii, ch. 8, p. 356. [A. 1883.]

3. Bot. Congenitally united, as leaves. 4. Zool. Im-movably united, as elytra and bones. 5. Anat. Formed from the same ossific center; as, a connate bone. [LL. connascere (pp. connatus), < L. con- (cum), together, + nascor, be born.] — connate, leaf, a leaf with the contiguous lower lobes congenitally united. If petiolate, it is designated as petiolate; if sessile about a stem, it is called perfoliate. — c. perfoliate, a. United by their bases about a stem: said of opposite sessile leaves. — connately, adv. — connation, n. 1. The state of being connate; congenital union. 2. New York Tribune Nov. 26, 1891, p. 3, col. 2.

3. The fundamental law of a civil state.

Constitutions may be formulated or not. The chief formal constitution is that of the United States of America, which is the fundamental organic law by which the national union of the States was formed, and under which the government is administered. It was framed and adopted by a convention called for that purpose (Sept. 17, 1787), ratified by each State separately, and went into operation March 4, 1789. It can be amended only in the manner provided by itself. Amendments I. to X. were added in 1791; Amendment XII., Sept. 25, 1804; Amendment XIII., Dec. 18, 1865; Amendment XIV., July 16, 1868; Amendment XV., March 30, 1870; Amendment XVI., Feb. 25, 1913; Amendment XVII., May 30, 1913; Amendment XVIII., January 16, 1920; Amendment XIX., Aug. 26, 1920. Amendments proposed by Congress must be ratified by two-thirds of the States, acting through their legislatures. This kind of constitution is frequently known as a rigid constitution. The British constitution is the whole body of public law, written and unwritten, which has grown up during the ages, consisting of immemorial customs, settled precedents, judicial decisions, and parliamentary enactments, and is known as an unwritten or customary constitution. The Constitution of 1789 . . . after all deductions . . . ranks above every other written constitution for the intrinsic excellence of its scheme, its adaptation to the circumstances of the people, the simplicity, brevity, and precision of its language.

Having power to enact, institute, or establish; instituting. —J, adv.—ness, n. —con-sti-tu-tive, n. A quality or constituent part of anything; an element of a constitution.

con-sti-tu-tor, 1 ken'sti-tū'tor or tor; 2 cōn'sti-tūt'tor, n. 1. One who has that which constitutes. 2. Law. One who promises to pay the debt of another.

con-strain, 1 ken-strān; 2 cōn-strān, v. [I. I. 1. To compel to action or to inaction, by either physical or moral means; urge; oblige; as, hunger constrained him to eat. 2. To confine or compress forcibly or unnaturally; as, the dress constrains her waist; a constrained position or voice. 3. Mech. To subject to constraint. See CONSTRAINT. 4. To violate; force. II. 1. To compel; urge; oblige. [< OF. constraindre, < L. constringo; see CONSTRUCT.] con-strēn't. SYN: see COMPEL; MAKE.—con-strain-a-ble (er), a.—con-strain'er, n.—con-strain-ing-ly, adv.—con-strain-ment, n.

con-strained, 1 ken-strēnd; 2 cōn-strānd, pa. 1. con-strained, s. Subjected to compulsion, or resulting from compulsion. 2. Unnaturally repressed; marked by constraint. 3. Confined and compressed.—con-strain-ed-ly, adv.—con-strain-ed-ness, n.

con-straint, 1 ken-strēnt; 2 cōn-strānt, n. 1. The operation of power, physical or moral, compelling or preventing action; coercion to or from. 2. The result of constraining; the state of being constrained. 3. Unnaturalness in manner resulting from distrust or diffidence, or from an attempt to repress one's feelings. 4. Mech. Anything that prevents a particle or body from moving except in some particular manner; the state of being thus hampered. Constraint is measured, in the case of a particle, by its mass multiplied by the square of that velocity which it was produce the actual velocity if free. [< OF. constraine, orig. f. pp. of constraindre; see CONSTRAIN.] con-strēnt, f. SYN: see RESERVE.

con-strict, 1 ken-strikt; 2 cōn-strikt, v. To compress or draw together at some point by external or internal force; cause to shrink in places; contract transversely; bind; cramp; generally the result of some physical growth; as, a cell or pod constricted into an hour-glass shape.

Large climbing plants . . . often do constrict the trees by which they rise, and, killing them, stand as a testament to their power. LIVINGSTONE pp. Africa ch. 16, p. 164. [L. W. B.]

[< L. constriclus, pp. of constringo, < con- (< cum), together, < stringo, draw tight.] —con-strict, v. To contract a particular point or points. —con-strict', v.—con-strictive, a. Tending to constrict.

con-stric-tion, 1 ken-strik-shan; 2 cōn-strik-shōn, n. 1. The act of constricting; local or transverse contraction.

2. The state of being constricted; a constricted part. —con-stric-tor, 1 ken-strik'tor or tor; 2 cōn-strikt'tor, n. 1. That which compresses as by a band. 2. A serpent that encircles and crushes its prey, as a boa or python. See ILLUS. under ABOYA. 3. Anat. A muscle that constricts an organ or opening, as, constrictors of the pharynx, thin flat muscles which control its dilatation and contraction; a sphincter.

con-string', 1 ken-string'; 2 cōn-string', et. [CONSTRINGED; CON-STRING'ING.] To cause contraction in. [< L. constringo; see CONSTRUCT.]

con-stru-a-ble (er), 1 ken-strū-a-bl; 2 cōn-strū-a-bl, a. Capable of being construed.—con-stru-a-ble-ly, adv.

con-struct, 1 ken-strukt; 2 cōn-strukt, v. 1. To adjust and join the materials or parts of so as to form a permanent whole; build; as, to construct a ship. 2. To form mentally by putting ideas together; fabricate; fashion; devise; as, to construct a theory. 3. Math. To exhibit (an algebraic value) geometrically. 4. To construe, as a sentence. [< L. constructus, pp. of construo, < con- (< cum), together, < struo, pile up.]

SYN: build, compose, erect, fabricate, form, frame, put together, put up, set up. See MAKE.—Ant. break, demolish, destroy, pull down.—con-structer, n. A constructor. —con-struct', 1 ken-strukt; 2 cōn-strukt, a. Relating to or expressing construction.—construct state, in Hebrew grammar, same as ANNEXION.

con-struct, n. 1. Any constructed object; specif. (Psychol.) any form of mental representation regarded as a result of external stimulation. 2. Gram. A phrasal group of words used in regular grammatical construction. The distinction between co-structions and constructions is a delicate one, so much so that two persons of like birth and education may be found to differ upon it.

EARLE Philol. Eng. Tongue p. 573. [CL. P. 1873.]

3. Math. A surface or outline.

—con-struct'-ible (er), a. Capable of being constructed.

con-struct-ion, 1 ken-strukt-shan; 2 cōn-strukt-shōn, n. 1. The act of constructing; also, that which is constructed; a structure; as, its construction took a long time; those old cromlech constructions. 2. The peculiarities, collectively, in which one structure may differ from another; style of building or composing; as, a building of steel or iron construction.

Steel or iron-construction. The process of building bridges, cars, ships, houses, and towers with the aid of a skeleton framework of beams, plates, and columns of prepared steel or iron, has been brought to great perfection within recent years. The first cast-iron bridge was built in 1777 at Colebrookdale, England; improved methods of steel-manufacture have led to a more widespread use of steel for building purposes. The steel used for these structural purposes is chiefly in the form of plates or shapes, the more important being the I bar, the angle, the channel and the Z bar; joining is done by rivets and screws, and as a rule the construction is webbed or cellular. The demand for fire-proof construction brought about the use of steel framework for flooring, and in time steel columns were introduced to carry the floor-loads and walls; hence, owing to the tensile strength of steel, arose the possibility of the very tall buildings known as "skyscrapers," where each tier consists of a rectangular group of steel-beam flooring and wall-columns braced against wind pressure. See STEELWORK BUILDING CONSTRUCTION. In structural steel this tensile strength varies from 52,000 to 70,000 pounds to the square inch, but in building work not more than 20,000 pounds to the square inch is calculated on. Steel enters into every field of construction, as caissons, sheet-piling, mine-strutting, etc., and but for the corrosive action of the elements such constructions would be imperishable.

3. The act of construing, or the interpretation thereby arrived at; as, the construction put upon his behavior.

Love's thinketh no evil; imputes no motive, sees the bright side, puts the best construction on every action.

DUNN Great Truths ch. 3, p. 37. [L. P. 1890.]

4. Law. The interpretation of an instrument or statute so as to ascertain its true meaning and legal effect.

5. Gram. (1) The putting together of words so as to form sentences, or the arrangement and union of words so produced; syntactical arrangement.

We find in every page words used in wrong senses, and constructions which violate the plainest rules of grammar. We have the low vulgarism of "mutual friend" for "common friend."

MACAULAY Boncell's Johnson p. 139. [L. S. & C. 1854.]

(2) The determination of the syntactical relations (of a word or sentence).

Errors in grammatical construction (embracing connection and arrangement) are solecisms. A solecism may be: (1) A violation of grammatical concord; as, "Whom (properly, who) do they suppose will be appointed?"

"Each of the four living writers had their (properly, his) writings recited." (2) A violation of grammatical arrangement; as, "A good man not only deserves the respect but the love of his fellow beings" (rather, "A good man deserves not only the respect of his fellow beings, but also their love"). "He could see that the room had been swept with half an eye." (3) A violation of grammatical propriety; as, "This is a very different case than (should be, from) that of the man in community" (properly, in the community). "The governor was attended with (correctly, by) his staff." "She wrote better than any (properly, any other) pupil in her class." In the following statement the error is double: "This paper has the ablest staff of any of its contemporaries." Not only do we have ablest of any, but "this paper" is included among its own contemporaries; the statement should have been "an able staff than, etc." (4) A violation of grammatical precision; as, "The rich and the poor (not the rich and poor) are alike mortal." "His teachers were factors with supreme (not the most supreme) contempt." Had he have laid low (correctly had he lain low) he would not have been wounded." "When he was (properly had) retired to his tent, they sat silent a long time." For errors of rhetorical construction, see RETHORICAL.

6. Psychol. The power of forming new combinations or systems of knowledge or thought out of elements already in the mind; mental constructiveness; also, the exercise and the products of this power. See phrases below. See CONSTRUCTIVE FACULTY.

The Abstractions, Inductions, Deductions, and Experimental processes of science, afford the material of mental construction.

BAIN Senses and Intellect bk. ii, p. 591. [L. 1873.]

7. Math. The preparation with instruments of a geometric design embodying certain fixed conditions and

22. Med. A progressive wasting disease; any form of phthisis. Specifically: (1) Consumption of the lungs, phthisis pulmonaris, in which tubercles form in the lungs and cause their gradual disintegration. (2) Consumption participate in the costume of Consul (1861)

11. 3. 1. To exert oneself in opposition or rivalry, as to obtain or to defend and preserve some object; often with with; as, to contend with a robber for one's life.

2. To debate earnestly; dispute. [< L. contendō, < con- (< cum), together, + tendō, stretch.]

Syn: antagonize, battle, combat, compete, contest, cope, dispute, fight, grapple, oppose, strive, vie, wrangle. See ARGUE; OPPOSE.—Ant: See SYNONYMS for AGREE; ALLOW.—Prep: contend about trifles; contend for the faith; contend with an antagonist; contend against fortune, fate, etc.

—con-ten-dent, n. An antagonist; contestant.—con-ten-der, n. One who contends.—con-ten-ding, pa. Opposing; disputing; striving against.—con-ten-dress, n. Ten.—con-ten-er-ment, 1 ken-tēn-er-ment or -ment; 2 cōn-tēn-er-ment, n. Land connected with a tenement, as a yard with a house, or necessary for the creditable support of a freeholder; that which is necessary for the support of men in their stations in life. [< CON- + TENEMENT.]

con-tent', 1 ken-tent'; 2 cōn-tēnt', vt. 1. To give contentment to; fulfil the hopes or expectations of; make easy in any situation; satisfy: chiefly reflexive; as, content yourself with little. 2. To meet the demands of. [< F. contenter, < LL. contento, < L. contentus; see CONTENT, a.] Syn: see INDULGE.

con-tent', a. Contented; satisfied. [F., < L. contentus, pp. of continere; see CONTAIN.]—content and non-content or not content, the formulas of assent and dissent in the British House of Lords, corresponding to the aye and no of the Commons.

con-tent', n. 1. Rest and quietness of the mind under existing circumstances; present satisfaction; contentment. 2. The means of contentment; as, I will give you your full content. 3. [Rare.] Submission; acquiescence; as, to work in patient content. 4. [Scot.] Hot water with milk and sugar: an imitation of tea. 5†. Compensation; pay. 6†. Contentment; discord. 7†. Intense joy or happiness; as, measureless content. Double riches of content.

SHAKESPEARE Richard III. act iv, sc. 4. [< OF. contente, < content; see CONTENT, a.] Syn: see SATISFACTION.—con-tent-ful, a.—con-tent-ivert, a.—con-tent-ness, a. [Rare.] Discontented.

con-tent', 1 ken-tent or ken-tent'; 2 cōn-tēnt' or cōn-tēnt', n. 1. All that a thing contains: usually in the plural; as, the contents of a box or a book. 2. Logic. The constituent elements of a conception, or meaning and relations involved: mostly singular and collective; as, the content of the idea of cause. Compare EXTENT.

The content of the notion is the attribute, or attributes, of which it consists. Porter Human Intellect p. 306 [n. 1890].

3. Eng. The quantity of a specified part; as, the silver content of a ton of ore. 4. Eng. & pl. Geom. Included area or space; extent; as, the solid or the superficial content of a sphere. 5. Customs. A written declaration of the quantity and kind of cargo, etc., carried by a ship, also of the port of destination, presented to a searcher before the vessel is cleared for sea on an outward voyage. 6. [Rare.] Holding capacity; size. [F., < L. contentus; see CONTENT, a.] con-tain't, -funded content. Psychol. 1. Organized or united mental contents, having characteristic form or form quality: used by Melnong (Fundirte Inhalt). 2. Such contents considered as given or presupposed in later process. (BAIDWIN).—linear c., length.—table of contents, a list of the subjects treated of in a book in the order in which they occur: distinguished from an alphabetical index. con-tent'st (xim)—con-tent-less, a. Without content or meaning.

con-tent-a-tion, 1 ken-tēn-tē-shan; 2 cōn-tēn-tē-shon, n. 1. [Archaic.] Payment or discharge, as of a claim. 2†. Content or satisfaction.

con-tent-ed, 1 ken-tēnt-ed; 2 cōn-tēnt-ed, pa. 1. Satisfied with things as they are; sufficiently easy in mind not to repine or object; content. 2. Resigned; willing. Syn: see COMFORTABLE.—ly, adv.—-ness, n.

con-tent-ion, 1 ken-tēn-shan; 2 cōn-tēn-shon, n. 1. The act of contending; rivalry; controversy; strife; wrangling; dispute. 2. An object or point in a controversy, as in a debate; a statement or proposition advanced or laid down in support of an argument; also, the argument itself.

But Professor Huxley is... well pleased with his own contentions. GLADSTONE in Nineteenth Century Feb., 1891, p. 358.

3. Earnest effort in the face of opposition either to accomplish or to prevent something; a stubborn competition with rivals. 4. Alternate stanzas in pastoral or other poems. See TENSON. 5†. Any great effort; strenuous endeavor; struggle. [F., < L. contentio(n)-, < contentus; see CONTENT, a.] con-tent-ious, n. Syn: see ALTERCATION; DISCORD; FEUD.—con-tent-ion-al, a. Having the element of contention; contentious.

con-tent-i-ous, 1 ken-tēn-shus; 2 cōn-tēn-shūs, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or fond of contention or strife; disputatious; quarrelsome; as, a contentious person or neighborhood.

Contentious voices rose from the sand-dunes.

ADRIUCH Wyndham Towers st. 29.

2. Involving or full of contention; controversial; debatable; as, contentious matters of legislation. 3. Given to contention, emulation, or competition.

Midst a contentious world, striving where none are strong.

BYRON Childe Harold can. 3, st. 69.

4. Law. Contested by litigation; as, a contentious case. [< L. contentious, < contentio(n)-; see CONTENTION.] Syn: see BELUCOSE.—con-tent-i-ous-ly, adv.—con-tent-i-ous-ness, n.

con-tent-ment, 1 ken-tēnt-ment or -ment; 2 cōn-tēnt-ment, n. The state of being content; content; also, the act or means of contenting.

con-ter-mi-na-ble (er), 1 ken-tēr-mi-na-bl; 2 cōn-tēr-mi-na-bl, a. [Rare.] Terminative or capable of terminating at the same point or at the same boundary.

con-ter-mi-nous, 1 ken-tēr-mi-nus; 2 cōn-tēr-mi-nūs, a. 1. Having a common boundary-line.

The deltas of the Hwangho and of the Yangtze are continuous.

J. H. WILSON China ch. 3, p. 34 [n. 1887].

2. Contained within or having the same limits; coextensive, as a lower classificatory group with a higher. [< L. terminus, < con- (< cum), with, + terminus, limit.] Syn: see ADJACENT.—con-ter-mi-nous-ly, adv.

con-test', 1 ken-tēst'; 2 cōn-tēst', r. 1. t. 1. To contend about earnestly with physical force; strive to take, keep, or control; as, to contest the passage of the Alps, or the possession of the field. 2. To contend in for victory; strive to win, as a battle or an election. 3. To contend about in argument, especially in opposition; dispute; challenge; call in question; litigate. 4†. To bear witness.

II. i. To contend strongly: followed by with; as, to contest with an adversary. [< F. contester, < L. contestor, call to witness, < con- (< cum), with, + testis, witness.] Syn: see CONTEST.—Prep: with.—contested election. 1. [U. S.] An election the result of which is contested before a court or a legislative body. 2. [Gt. Brit.] An election contested at the polls by two or more candidates, an election contested before a court being said to be "controversial."—con-test-ing, n.

con-text', 1 ken-tēkst; 2 cōn-tēkst, n. Bot. A fleshy layer growing between the hymenial layer and the vegetative portion of the thallus in certain fungi.

con-text', n. 1. The portions of a discourse that precede or follow and are connected with a passage quoted; verses preceding and following a text of Scripture.

It is ill to wrench passages of the Bible out of their context. SPURGEON Sermon Notes vol. iii, p. 275 [n. w. 1885].

2†. The whole text of a work. [< L. contextus, < contexo, weave together, < con- (< cum), together, + tezo, weave.]—con-text-u-al, a. 1. Of or belonging to the context. 2. Agreeing with the text.—ly, adv.—con-text-ive, 1 ken-tēkst-iv; 2 cōn-tēkst-iv, a. [Rare.] That con-text-iv-ly, weaves or entwines together; as, a context-ive system or method.

con-text-ure, 1 ken-tēkst-echur or -tur; 2 cōn-tēkst-echur or -tur, n. [Rare.] To effect by texture; interlace; weave.—con-text-ure, n. 1. Anything made of interwoven materials. 2. The style or manner of interweaving; disposition and arrangement of the constituent materials; constitution or composition of a thing.

Upon which, I have been at a great expense to fit up all the bones with exact texture and in due symmetry. SWIFT Works, Tale of a Tub p. 72 [w. v. n. 1871].

3. Scots Law. The right to material woven into one's fabric. See CONSTRUCTURE. 4†. Context. [< L. contextus, pp. of contexo; see CONTEXT, n.]—con-text-ur-al, a. Pertaining to texture.

contg., abbr. Containing.

con-ti-cent, 1 kōn-ti-sent; 2 cōn-ti-sēnt, a. [Rare.] Silent; especially, silent together, as a company.

con-tig-na-tion, n. 1. A uniting together. 2. A framework. con-tig-ni-ty, 1 kōn-ti-giū-ti; 2 cōn-ti-giū-ti, n. 1. The relation of being contiguous or in actual contact; immediate connection; hence, nearness; proximity.

The contiguity of the two boats was such as to excite serious alarm. M. S. CUMMINS Lamp-lighter p. 405 [n. m. c. 1888]. 2. Uninterrupted connection, as in time or space; continuity. 3. Physiol. Psychol. The adjacency or immediate relation of two impressions. See LAW OF CONTIGUITY (below). [< LL. contiguous(-s), < L. contiguus; see CONTIGUOUS.]—law of contiguity (Psychol.), the principle of association by which anything present in the mind tends to recall what was originally most closely connected with it in space or time. See LAW OF ASSOCIATION, under ASSOCIATION.

con-tig-u-ous, 1 kōn-tig-yu-us; 2 cōn-tig-yū-us, a. Touching or joining at the edge or boundary; close together; adjacent; adjoining: followed by to. [< L. contiguus, < contingo; see CONTACT.]—con-tig-u-at-ig; con-tig-u-ly, adv.—con-tig-u-ous-ness, n.

Con-tin', 1 kōn-tin; 2 cōn-tin, n. A village in Ross and Cromarty, Scotland.

con-ti-nence, 1 kōn-ti-nens, -nen-s; 2 cōn-ti-nēnc, con-ti-nen-cy, -nēn-cy, n. 1. Self-restraint with respect to desires, appetites, and passions; especially, self-restraint with respect to the sexual passion, either in celibacy or in marriage.

The very sensual tone of Greek life rendered the modern notion of prolonged continence wholly alien to their thoughts. LECKY Hist. Eur. Moral vol. ii, p. 26 [n. 1886].

2. Capacity for containing; content. 3†. Continuity. [< F. continence, < L. continencia, < continere (-s), see CONTINENT, a.] con-ti-nent-ly, n. Syn: see ABSTINENCE.

con-ti-nent, 1 kōn-ti-nent; 2 cōn-ti-nēnt, a. 1. Self-restrained; moderate, especially with respect to the sexual passion; abstinent; chaste. 2. [Archaic.] Containing; with.

Each of these adjectives having lost its individual name and existence in that [river] which at last... represents and is continuous of them all. TRENCH Words p. 151 [w. v. w. 1861].

3†. Med. Continuing; not intermittent or remittent; as, a continant fever. 4†. Restraining. 5†. Continuous; connected. [F., < L. continens (-s), pp. of continere; see CONTAIN.] Syn: see PURE.—ly, adv.—-ness, n.

con-ti-nent, n. 1. One of the great bodies of land on the globe; typically, a basin elevated above the surface of the sea enclosed between lofty mountain ranges, and jutting like a wedge into the water hemisphere.

The land of the globe is sometimes divided into two continents, the eastern and the western; sometimes into four, Africa, Asia, and Europe being separately enumerated; more commonly into five, Australia being reckoned as one; still oftener into six, North and South America being counted separately; and, since 1909, the land about the south pole as another—the Antarctic, Austral, or seventh continent.

2. [C.] In a restricted sense, Europe, as distinguished from the British Islands; as, a tour on the Continent.

3. Eccl. See ENCRITATE. 4†. Land generally, as distinguished from water. 5†. That which contains. 6†.

That which is contained. [< LL. continen(-s), < L. continen(-s), continuous; see CONTINENT, a.]—dark continent, Africa.—Island c., an island so large as to merit, or nearly merit, the designation of a continent, as Australia. con-ti-nen-tal, 1 kōn-ti-nen-tal; 2 cōn-ti-nēn-tal, a. 1. Pertaining to or characteristic of a continent; as, a continental climate.

He was... Continental in all his ideas and fancies, and could not condescend to be an islander.

WILSON Edwin Brothcroft p. 23 [n. v. 1862].

2. [C.] In English literature, pertaining to or characteristic of the continent of Europe; as, the Continental press. 3. [C.] Pertaining to the United States during the period of the Revolutionary war. 4. Of continental breadth or proportions; huge; as, a continental glacier.

Continental Congress, see CONGRESS.—c. divide, the watershed ridge of a continent; e.g., the divide, in the Rocky Mountain range, between the streams flowing to the Atlantic ocean, and those flowing to the Pacific or into the interior basins.—C. money, paper money issued by the Continental Congress from time to time until it reached the amount of $200,000,000. The paper was so thick that the British called it the "pasteboard money of the rebels." It rapidly depreciated in value, and reached nil at the close of 1779.—c. plateau (Phys. Geog.), a continent extended to the brink of its continental shelf.—C. pronunciation, a pronunciation of Latin and Greek in which the vowels are given the sounds they have in most languages of continental Europe.—c. shelf (Phys. Geog.), the irregular submarine margin of a continent, marking its real limits, and succeeded by a steep declivity (= the c. slope) into the ocean basin.—C. system, a system of commercial blockade organized in 1806 against England by Napoleon I., by which he sought to deprive her of all trade with the Continent.—con-ti-nen-tal-ism, n. Any manner, mode of expression, belief, idea, action, etc., peculiar to or characteristic of the European continent.—con-ti-nen-tal-ly, adv.

The act or condition of being or living anywhere, as in intimacy; social intercourse. [F., < L. conversatio(-n-), < conversatus, ppr. of conversor; see CONVERSE, v.]

Syn. chat, colloquy, communication, communion, confabulation, conference, converse, dialog, discourse, intercourse, talk. Conversation (Latin con, with) is, etymologically, an interchange of ideas with some other person or persons. Talk may be wholly one-sided. Many brilliant conversers have been incapable of conversation. There may be intercourse without conversation, as by looks, signs, etc. Communication is of hearts, with or without words; communication is often by writing, and may be uninvited and unreciprocated. Talk may denote the mere utterance of words with little thought; thus, we say idle talk, empty talk, rather than idle or empty conversation. Discourse is now applied chiefly to public addresses. A conference is more formal than a conversation. Dialog denotes ordinarily an artificial or imaginary conversation, generally of two persons, but sometimes of more. A colloquy is indefinite as to number and generally somewhat informal. Compare synonyms for DEVIATION. — Prep.: conversant with friends; conversant among guests; about a matter. — criminal conversation, unlawful sexual intercourse; frequently abbreviated crim. con. — con-ver-sa-tion-a-ble (adj.), [Rare.] Same as CONVERSABLE. — con-ver-sa-tion-al, a. Of or pertaining to conversation; as, conversational powers. — con-ver-sa-tion-al-ist, n. One who converses; especially, one who interests by his conversation; an able talker; converser. con-ver-sa-tion-ist, n.

They have a new term nowadays . . . for people that do a good deal of talking; they call them 'conversationalists' or 'conversationalists'; talkists, I suppose, would just as well do. HOLMES Poet at the Breakfast-Table ch. 2, p. 52. [O. & C. 1872.]

— con-ver-sa-tion-al-ly, adv. — con-ver-sa-tion-ed, a. Possessed of manners; behaved. — con-ver-sa-tion-ism, n. An expression used in conversation; a colloquialism. — con-ver-sa-tion-ize, vt. [Rare.] To hold conversation. — con-ver-sa-tiv (es), a. [Rare.] Conversable; social; often opposed to contemplative.

2. (a) [Archaic.] To live in fellowship; associate; commune; followed by with. (b) To dwell; live. 3. To have sexual connection. 4. To discourse familiarly and informally; an improper use. [< F. converser, < L. conversor, live with, < converso; see CONVERSE, v.]

con-ver-s', 1 ken-vūrs'; 2 cōn-vērs', a. 1. Turned about so that two parts are interchanged, as by causing the first to appear last and the last first; transposed; reversed; as, a converse arrangement of parts. 2. Logic & Math. Specifically, bearing a reciprocal relation to another proposition or theorem; using that which has been antecedent (or hypothesis) for consequent (or conclusion) and that which has been consequent (or conclusion) for antecedent (or hypothesis), especially when this can be done rationally.

The propositions "all negroes are black" and "some black men are negroes" are converse to each other and the converse of each other. The theorem that, in the case of two triangles which have two sides of the one equal to two sides of the other, each to each, that triangle has the greater third side which has the greater angle opposite to it, is converse or the converse to the theorem that, in the case above mentioned, the greater angle will be that which is opposite the greater third side.

con-ver-s'i-ble (adj.), 1 ken-vūrs'i-bl; 2 cōn-vērs'i-bl, a. Capable of being transposed, or transformed into the converse; convertible. — con-ver-s'i-ble-ty, n. Same as CONVERTIBILITY.

con-ver-sion, 1 ken-vūrs'hən; 2 cōn-vēr'shən, n. 1. The act of converting, or the state of being converted; change from one state or position to another, or from one form to another, or from one substance to another; as the conversion of iron into steel; exchange of one object or thing for another; as, the conversion of timberland into arable land, of stocks into money, or food into blood. 2. Theol. The act of turning or of being turned from the supreme love of self to the love and service of God; the spiritual change by which the soul is turned to God from spiritual indifference or gross forms of sin.

For after all, the object of religion is conversion and to change people's behaviour. MATTHEW ARNOLD Last Essays, Bishop Butler p. 92. [MACM. 1877.]

3. A change in which one adopts and upholds an opinion different from that which he has heretofore maintained; as, a political conversion. 4. Logic. A form of immediate inference in which the subject and predicate or antecedent and consequent terms of a judgment change places in such a way that the converse or transposed form is a legitimate inference from the converted or original judgment. Legitimate or illogical conversion is of three kinds: simple conversion, in which neither the quantity nor the quality of the judgment is changed; conversion by limitation or per accidens, when the quantity is changed from universal to particular while the quality remains unchanged; conversion by negation or contradiction, when the quality is changed while the quantity remains unchanged; distinguished from contrary proposition.

5. Law. Wrongful appropriation to one's own use of the goods of another. 6. Equity. The exchange of real to personal property or the reverse which is considered to have taken place where no actual exchange has been effected, as in settling the affairs of an estate.

7. Mil. (1) A change of front so that the line of battle faces in a new direction. (2) The change of weapons into new forms, as of smooth-bore guns into rifles.

8. Forest. A change in forest-management from one method to another, as, for example, from the seed system to the sprout system. 9. Math. The formation of a new proportion from four proportional terms by substituting for the second the difference between the first and second and for the fourth the difference between the third and fourth. 10. Psychol. (1) The process of turning one mental state, through substitution, into another; as, the conversion of a memory image into the original object or event it represents. primary conversion.

(2) The transference of the mental state (memory) of one person into that of another person, as in the confirmation of testimony by a second witness. secondary or social conversion. 11. Brewing. The transformation of starch into maltose and dextrins by enzymic action (diastase) during the mashing process. [< L. conversio(-n-), < conversus; see CONVERSE, v.]

Syn.: change, regeneration, renewal, renewing, transformation, transmutation. In the religious sense regeneration is the vital renewing of the soul by the power of the divine Spirit; conversion is the conscious and manifest change from evil to good, or from a lower to a higher spiritual state; as, in Luke xlii, 32, "when the Pharisee strengtheneth his brethren." Popular use conversion is the most common word to express the idea of regeneration. Compare synonyms for CHANGE, v. — Ant.: continuance, identity, permanence, persistence. — Prep.: the conversion of the heathen from idolatry to the Christian faith; the conversion of Paul from a persecutor to a disciple; the conversion of water to or into ice.

See subordinate. — c. conjunctions (Gram.), those conjunctions that join coordinate clauses, etc. See CONJUNCTION. Coordinate (coordinating) conjunctions embrace (1) copulative, expressing addition or expansion (and, also, etc.); (2) adversative, expressing opposition (but, nevertheless, etc.); (3) disjunctive, expressing exclusion (or, nor, etc.); (4) causal, expressing cause (because, etc.); (5) illative, or inferential, expressing consequence and inference (hence, therefore, etc.). — co-or-di-nate-ly, adv. — co-or-di-nate-ness, n. co-or-di-nate, n. 1. One who or that which is of the same order, rank, power, etc. 2. Math. A member of a system of lines or angles by means of which, as elements of reference, position is determined in relation to certain fixed lines or planes.
 The coordinates commonly used are as follows: (1) The Cartesian, the distances of the given point from each of two axes (measured parallel to the other) (see AXIS), or, in three-dimensional geometry, its distance from each of three intersecting planes parallel to the intersection of the other two. In case the axes or planes are at right angles, the coordinates are called rectilinear; otherwise they are oblique. (2) The polar, being the length of the line joining the given point with a fixed origin called the pole, and the angle made by this line with a fixed line passing through the origin. An extension makes this system applicable also to three-dimensional geometry. (3) Phon. A sound, as a stopped consonant having a formation similar to others of the same group.
 — areal coordinate (Math.), the area of a triangle used to fix the position of a point. Three such are employed, having the point as their common vertex and the sides of a fundamental triangle as bases. — barycentric c., a triangular or a tetrahedral coordinate: so called because the point whose position is to be determined is always the center of gravity of bodies located at the fixed vertices and having weights equal to the value of the coordinate. — biangular c., one of the two angles at the base of a triangle whose base is a fixed line and whose vertex is the point whose position is to be determined. — bicircular c., any coordinate in a system for determining the position of a point by the intersection of circles. — bilinear c., the distance of a point whose position is to be determined, from either of two fixed points. — vectorial c., — binary c., any coordinate in a system locating the position of a point on a plane, in which case only two independent quantities are required. — bipunctal c., the segment between a line and either of two focal or fixed parallel rays: used to determine the position of the line. — Cartesian coordinates, coordinates with reference to axes. See AXIS. — curve-c., a coordinate belonging to any system used for determining curves. — curvilinear c., any coordinate for fixing the position of a point on a curved surface. — elliptic c., either of two con-focals whose intersection determines the position of a point in a plane; also, any one of the three similarly fixing a point in space. — external c. (Statist. Mech.), in a given system, a coordinate of an external body upon which the potential energy of the system is partly dependent. — generalized c., the value of a parameter in an equation of a set of surfaces, determining one surface of that set, and used with two other parameters to determine the position of a point by intersection. — geographical coordinates, latitude or longitude. — homogeneous c., a ratio of two coordinates, in a system where such ratios are used instead of the coordinates themselves. One more original coordinate is required than would otherwise be necessary, but the resulting equations are rendered homogeneous by the plan. — isothermal c., one of two orthogonal curves whose intersection determines the position of a point in a plane. — isobaric c., one of a system of six coordinates determining the position of a line in space. — orthotomic c., one of three surfaces meeting at right angles, and determining the position of a point by such intersection. — palpable c., any one of the generalized coordinates indicating the configuration of a system: so called because they are often the only coordinates that remain after certain substitutions in the Lagrangian equations. — polar c., the distance of a point from a fixed point (pole) or the angle made by the line connecting these (radius vector) with a fixed line used together to determine the position of the point in a plane; also, any one of three quantities (radial distance, latitude, and longitude) used to fix a point in space. — positional c., see under POSITIVISM. — projective c., a coordinate in any system that defines a point or a plane by the considerations of projective or graphic geometry free from all metrical elements. — quadrilateral c., the distance of a point from one of four fixed planes, measured in a fixed direction: used with the three other corresponding distances to fix the position of the point. — Rodriguez's c., the cosine of the angle of rotation about one of two axes through a fixed (stationary) point in a solid body: used together with other coordinates to define the position of the body. — spherical coordinates, distances measured on a sphere from axes which are great circles. — tangential c., one of a system of coordinates defining the position of a line in a plane or of a plane in space by points of tangency. — tetrahedral c., triangular c., see BARYCENTRIC COORDINATE. — trigonometrical c., a spherical coordinate. — trilinear coordinates, the distances from the sides of a fixed triangle of reference. — vectorial c., same as binary c. co-or-di-na-tion, 1 kō-ōr'di-nā-shən; 2 cō-ōr'di-nā-shən, n. 1. The act of coordinating, or the state of being coordinate. 2. Gram. The part of syntax that treats of the combination of independent sentences into compound sentences. [LL. coordinatus; see COORDINATE, v.]

co-or-di-na-tive, a. Expressing coordination; coordinative. — co-or-di-na-tory, a. Pertaining to coordination.
co-or-re, n. Same as co-re.
Coorg, 1 kūr; 2 cōōr, n. Same as KURG.
Coorg-gee, 1 kūr'jē; 2 cōōr'jē, n. [Ind.] A plow fitted with a drill for planting grain.
Coorn, 1 kūr; 2 cōōr, v. Same as COWER, v.
Coorn'hert, 1 kūr'n'hert; 2 cōōr'n'hert, n. Dirk Volckertszoon (1522-1590), a Dutch scholar, poet, and engraver; Creation of the World (7 plates). Coorn'hert; Cue'ren-hert.
Coorong, 1 kūr'ōng; 2 cōōr'ōng, n. [Anglo-Austral.] An Australian tree (Frenela robusta) of the pine family.
Coorong-lte, 1 kūr'ōng-ltē; 2 cōōr'ōng-ltē, n. A mineral caoutchouc (C<sub>10</sub>H<sub>10</sub>O), found in Coorong, South Australia.
Co-or-thog-o-nal, 1 kō-ōr-thog-o-nal; 2 cō-ōr-thog-o-nal, a. Cutting each other at right angles, as meridians and the equator cut smaller circles on a sphere. — co-or-tho-met-, n.
Co-os, n. 1. 1 kō'os; 2 cō'os. A county in northern New Hampshire; 1,812 sq. m.; county-seat, Lancaster. 2. 1 kūs; 2 cōūs. A county in S. W. Oregon; 1,578 sq. m.; county-seat, Empire City.
Co-os, 1 kō'os; 2 cō'os, n. Bib. Acts xxi, 1.
Co-os'sa, 1 kō'os'sa; 2 cō'os'sa, n. 1. A river in N. W. Georgia and N. Alabama; length, 250 m.; uniting with the Tallapoosa, forms the Alabama. 2. A county in E. central Alabama; 671 sq. m.; county-seat, Rockford.
Coos Bay, 1 kūs; 2 cōūs. An inlet on the coast of Oregon; lat. 40° 21' N.
Coose, 1 kūs or kōz; 2 cōūs or cōs. [Dial., Eng.] I. cf. To gossip; loiter. II. n. A gossip.
Coos'er, 1 kūs'er; 2 cōūs'er, n. [Scot.] A stallion; a courser.
Co-os'si-fy, 1 kō-ōs'si-fai; 2 cō-ōs'si-fy, v. [-FIED; -FYING.] To grow together so one bone: said of two bones or parts of bones previously separate. — co-os'si-fi-ca-tion, n.
Coost, 1 kūs; 2 cōōst [Scot.], imp. of CAST, v.
Coost, 1 kūs; 2 cōōst, n. [Scot.] Physique; condition.
Coos'ten, 1 kūs'n; 2 cōūs'n, pa. [Scot.] Having been cast.
Coot, 1 kūt; 2 cōōt, v. [Eng.] To provide with a hip-roof, as a house or haystack.
Coot, 1 kūt; 2 cōōt, n. 1. A fulicine rail-like aquatic bird having a shield-like extension over the forehead and lobate membrane to the toes. The plumage is of a uniform slaty color, with the edge of the wing whitish. Fulica atra is the European, F. americana the American coot. 2. [U. S.] A sea-duck, especially a scoter; as, the black coot (Odemia perspicillata). 3. The guillemot (Uria troile). 4. [Brit. Guiana.] The purple gallinule. 5. [Colloq.] A common or stupid fellow; as, a poor coot. 6. [Scot. & N. Eng.] (1) The ankle. (2) A fetlock. (3) A trifle; a thing of little value. [ME. coote, prob. Cel. cp. W. cutiar, < cwita, bottled, < tar, hen.] cooter; coter.
Coot'a-mun'dra, 1 kūt'a-mun'dra; 2 cōō'ta-mun'dra, n. A town in Harden county, New South Wales.
Coote, 1 kūt; 2 cōōt, Sir Eyre (1726-1783). A British general born in Ireland; governor of Calcutta; took Pondicherry, defeated Hyder Ali. [Ireland.]
Coote-hill, 1 kūt'hil; 2 cōōt'hil, n. A town in Cavan county, Ireland.
Cooter, 1 kūt'er; 2 cōōt'er, n. [Local U. S.] 1. The box tortoise (Cistudo carolina). 2. A Florida terrapin (Pseudemys floridana). 3. The snapping turtle.
Coot'foot, 1 kūt'fūt; 2 cōōt'fūt, n. The red phalarope.
Coot'grebe, 1 kūt'grēb; 2 cōōt'grēb, n. A finfoot or sun-grebe.
Cooth, 1 kūt; 2 cōōth, n. [Scot.] A young coalfish.
Coothay, 1 kūt-thay; 2 cōōthay, n. [Ind.] A striped satin.
Coote, 1 kūt; 2 cōōt, a. [Scot.] Having feathers on the legs, as certain birds; rough-legged. [Itchen use.]
Coote-lie, 1 kūt'li; 2 cōōt'li, n. [Brit. Soldiers] A body-louse (Pediculus vestimentorum); orig. unknown. Perhaps related to Sanskrit kuti, body, or to Urdu khuth, scab.
Coote-lie, 1 kūt'li; 2 cōōt'li, v. [Scot.] To handle carefully or gently; treat affectionately.
Cop, 1 kōp; 2 cōp, v. [Dial., Eng.] 1. To overtop; excel. 2. To remove the top of; pollard. 3. To pile in a heap.
Cop, v. [Slang.] To arrest; take into custody; catch. — to cop it [Slang.] To catch it. See CATCH.
Cop, n. [Slang.] A policeman. cop'pert.
Cop, n. 1. The top or head of a thing, as of a hill. 2. The tuft on the head of certain birds. 3. The conical roll of thread formed on the spindle of a spinning-machine. 4. A cop-tube. 5. [Prov. Eng.] (1) A heap; mound; bank. (2) An enclosure surrounded by a ditch. (3) A peat wall. (4) A wooden knob on the top of a beehive. (5) A measure of peas in sheaves. (6) A stack of grain. (7) A drinking-cup. (8) A blow. 9. Golf. The top or face of a bunker. 7. Mil. A merlon: sometimes called cop. 8. A spider. [AS. cop, cp. G. kop, head, & cop, dyeing, n. The dyeing of yarn upon the cop; cop-framing; a machine used for cop-spinning. — cop-reel, n. Weaving. A mechanical device which makes hanks out of yarn taken from mule-cops. — cop-spinning, n. A system used in worsted-spinning. — cop-tube, n. The tube on which the cop of thread or yarn is wound in a spinning-machine. — cop-winder, n. A machine for winding yarn from hanks upon a cop-shaped spindle for use in the weaver's shuttle.
Cop, abbr. Copernican; Copitic.
Cop, abbr. Copper; copyright. [landmark.]
Cop'a, 1 kō'pā; 2 cō'pā, n. [Sp. Am.] A tree-top used as a cop'a-bier (1 kō'pā-bi; 2 cō'pā-bi). [Obs. or Rare.] That may be coped with.
Cop-al-ha, 1 kō-pē'ba or -pā; 2 cō-pā'ba or -pā'ba (xiii), n. Med. A nauseous South-American balsam or resinous exudation from some species of Copaiba, used in affections of the mucous membrane. [Sp., < Braz. cupaba.] cop-al-ha; cop-pay-vat.
Cop-al-gue, 1 kō-pēg; 2 cō-pāg, n. A greenhouse twining Cop-al-va, 1 kō-pē'va or -pā'va; 2 cō-pā'va or -pā'va, n. Bot. A genus of trees, native in tropical America and Africa, of the family Cesalpiniaceae, having hard, durable wood. Several species yield copalba. See PURPLEHEART. [NL. = COPALBA.]
cop-al-vic, 1 kō-pē'vik or -pā'vik; 2 cō-pā'vic or -pā'vic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from copalba. co- pal'blet. — copalvic acid, a crystalline compound (C<sub>20</sub>H<sub>18</sub>O<sub>2</sub>) derived from copalba balsam by the action of alkalis.

cop-al-yē-wood, 1 kō-pē'yē-wūd; 2 cō-pā'yē-wūd, n. The wood of a tree (Vochysia guianensis) of the family Vochysiaceae, of British Guiana.
Copake, 1 kō-pēk; 2 cō-pāk, n. A village in Columbia county, N. Y.
Cop'al, 1 kō'pal; 2 cō'pal (xiii), n. A hard transparent resin used for varnishes. It is collected in the form of exudation from various tropical trees, or is dug from the ground in a fossilized state, that procured in E. Africa being most highly valued. See GUM. [Mex. Copalli, resin.] — chacaze copal, a hard copal shipped from Zanzibar. — fossil c., same as COPALIN.
cop'al-che, 1 kō-pāl'chē; 2 cō-pāl'chē, n. 1. A Brazilian tree (Styracinea pseudoquina) of the nux-vomica family (Loganiaceae). 2. A Mexican shrub (Croton nitens) of the spurge family (Euphorbiaceae). — cop'al-chit.
cop'al-if'er-ous, 1 kō'pal-if'er-ūs; 2 cō'pal-if'er-ūs, a. Producing copal. [copal & L. fero, bear.]
 Beyond Muhangbo was all jungle and forest, tall trees rising from red copaliferous land.
 R. F. BURTON East Regions Cent. Africa ch. 3, p. 61. [1860.]
Cop'al-in, 1 kō'pal-in; 2 cō'pal-in, n. Mineral. A honey-yellow fossil resin (C<sub>10</sub>H<sub>8</sub>O<sub>2</sub>) obtained from the blue clay of Highgate Hill, London, resembling copal resin.
cop'al-net.
Cop'al-m, 1 kō'pām; 2 cō'pām, n. The sweet-gum tree, or the balsam obtained from it.
Cop'an, 1 kō-pān; 2 cō-pān, n. A ruined city in Honduras, Central America.
Cop'ang, 1 kō'pāng; 2 cō'pāng, n. [Malaysia.] A copper coin.
cop-par-ce-nary, 1 kō-pār'sē-nē-rī; 2 cō-pār'sē-nē-rī [RIES, 1-riz; 2-ris, pl.]. I. n. 1. Law. An estate in lands inherited by coparceners. This form of joint heirship occurs only among female inheritors in cases where the rule of primogeniture is observed among the males, as is usually the case in England. In law coparceners constitute but one heir, the rights of deceased coparceners descending to the heirs per stirpes. An estate in coparcenary often arises among males in consequence of inheritance by gavelkind. 2. Copartnership. cop-par-ce-ny. II. a. Law. Of or pertaining to coparceners.
cop-par-ce-ner, 1 kō-pār'sē-nēr; 2 cō-pār'sē-nēr, n. Law. One of two or more co-heirs of an estate. [cop & PAR-CE-NE.]
cop-part, v. I. L. To share. II. t. To partake.
Cop'part, 1 kō'pārt; 2 cō'pārt, n. One of several associated parts of a whole.
cop-part-ment, n. Compartment.
cop-part-ner, 1 kō-pār'nēr; 2 cō-pār'nēr, n. One who partakes with another; a sharer; specif., a partner in business. — cop-part-ner-ship, n. The state of being associated with another or others in business or interest; partnership. cop-part-ner-y.
cop-as-sion-ate, cop-as-for, etc. See co-, prefix.
cop'a-taint, a. Pointed on high; crowned: said of hats.
Cope, 1 kōp; 2 cōp, v. [COPE; COPIING.] I. t. To contend or strive on equal terms; oppose or resist, as with equal strength: often with with; as, to cope with adversity. II. t. To contend with; encounter. [Var. of COUP, v., and associated with COPE, v.] couper. Syn. see CONTEND. — Prep. with.
Cope, v. [COPE; COPIING.] I. t. 1. To dress in a cope or cloak. 2. To furnish with a coping, as a wall. 3. To form (a joint in a molding) without mitering, as in making a sash-frame. II. t. To form a cope or coping; bend or arch; especially, to bend over the end of an iron lodging-knee so that it may hook into the beams. — to cope off (Founding), to remove a part of a pattern buried in the cope of a foundry flask. — to cope over (Arch.), to slant downward from a wall: said of the soffit of a projection.
Cope, v. & cf. [Archaeol.] To make return for; bargain; buy. [cf. D. koop, buy, orig. bargain; cp. CHEAP.]
Cope, v. [COPE; COPIING.] Falconry. To cut or clip, as the talons of a hawk. [cf. CUP, v.]
Cope, v. [Prov. Eng.] To muzzle the mouth of, by sewing or tying; said especially of a ferret.
Cope, n. 1. Anything that arches overhead; a coping. He [Mr. Falkland] would remain for whole nights together under the naked cope of heaven. W. GOSWIM Caleb Williams vol. i, p. 191. [1831.]
 2. Ecol. A mantle semicircular in shape worn by priests or bishops on solemn or ceremonial occasions; also, a coronation state, processional, or choral vestment often worn by laymen. With a pendant of such magnitude, who would stake a kingdom for the cut of a churchman's cope. J. S. BLACKIE Lay Sermons ch. 8, p. 247. [A. 1881.]
 3. A cloak or robe worn at the Convocation by university doctors at Cambridge. 4. The upper section of a foundry flask. 5. A cloak. [LL. capa, cape.] copelet; koper.
cope, v. [US.] To use a finishing rough-cut grooves in a cutter. Woodworking. The cutter of a planing-machine. — c. ring, n. A device for carrying the cope in a loam-mold.
Cope, n. [Eng.] 1. The tribute or lot formerly paid to the lord of the soil in lead-mines of Derbyshire, England. 2. A cooper's wage. See COPER.
Cope, n. 1. Charles West (1811-1890), an English historical painter. 2. Edward Drinker (1840-1913), an American biologist and paleontologist. 3. Thomas Fyfe (1875-1913), an American shipping merchant and philanthropist.
Cope, 1 kō'pek; 2 cō'pek, n. A Russian coin, the ko'pek, 1 hundredth of a ruble, worth from one-half to three-fourths of a cent. See COIN. [Rus. kopek.]
cope, cur'ier, 1 kōp'kūr; 2 cōp'kūr, v. [Ir.] To turn a somersault.
Cope, 1 kō'pānd; 2 cō'pānd, Ralph (1837-1910), a British astronomer royal for Scotland; explorer and educator.
Cope, land, n. A group of islands off the N. W. coast of Dorset county, Ireland.
Cope-la-ta, 1 kō-pē-lā'tā; 2 cō-pā-lā'tā, n. A Piece of Five pl. Ascid. A section of tunicates coxteen pl. elve with Larvalia. [Gr. ἐπλάττω, row, < ἐπλάττω, handle, & λατάν, driver, < λατάν, drive.] Cope-la-tā-tā; co-pe-late, a. & n.

co-pel'l-din, } 1 ko-pel'l-din, -din or -din; 2 co-pel'l-din, -din or -din. n. Chem. A liquid hydrite (C<sub>2</sub>H<sub>5</sub>N(CH<sub>3</sub>)(C<sub>2</sub>H<sub>5</sub>)) of a collidin.
co-pel'mat, n. A chapman.
co-pel'mat, 1 kôp'mat; 2 cöp'mat, n. 1. One with whom a person copes or contends; an antagonist. 2. A colleague or partner; an ally; associate. co-pel'mat.
co-pen-ha-gen, 1 kô-pen-ha-gen; 2 cöp-pu-ha-gen, n. 1. A hot drink made of rum, whipped eggs, and sugar. 2. A game in which a circle of players grasp a rope while one on the inside tries to strike or touch the hands of some player of the opposite sex in the circle. 3. A kind of snuff. [< Copenhagen, Denmark.] Co-pen-ha-gen, (Dan. Kjöben-havn) 1 kÿ'b'en-hüv'n; 2 kyü'b'en-häv'n, n. A manufacturing seaport city on the N. E. coast of Zealand Island; capital of Denmark; bombarded by the British fleet, under Parker and Nelson, 1801, and Cathcart in 1807.
co-pe-pod, 1 kô-pi-ped; 2 co-pe-pöd, I. a. 1. Oar-footed, as a crustacean. 2. Of or pertaining to the Copepoda, like a copepod; as, the copepod stage of a prawn. II. n. One of the Copepoda. co-pe-pod-dan.
Co-pep'o-da, 1 kô-pep'o-da; 2 co-pep'o-da, n. pl. Crust. An order of entomostracans with a carapace covering head and thorax, foot-jaws, and five pairs of oar-like feet: including free-swimming and parasitic species, as Cyclops and carplite. [< Gr. köpë, oar, + pous (pod-), foot.] Co-pep'o-da.
cop'er, 1 kôp'er; 2 cöp'er, n. [North. Eng.] A miner working at a certain price of cope per ton or of; hence, a petty dealer.
cop'er, n. A vessel stocked with and supplying ardent spirits, etc., to the deep-sea fishers of the North Sea, usually in exchange for fish.
cop'et, n. [Prov. Eng.] A dealer in horses on a limited scale.
co-pe'ri-od'ic, 1 kô-pi-rî-od'ik; 2 co-pe'ri-od'ic, a. Physics. Going through a repeating cycle of changes in the same interval of time: applied especially to forces the increase or diminution in intensity of which is synchronous.
Co-per'ni-can, 1 kô-pür'ni-kan; 2 co-pür'ni-can, a. Pertaining to Nicholas Copernicus, or to his theory of the solar system.
— Copernican system, the accepted astronomical system, first promulgated by Copernicus in 1543, which makes the earth revolve on its axis, and considers the sun as the center of motion of the earth and planets; the heliocentric system.
Co-per'ni-can, n. A supporter of the Copernican system.
Co-per'ni-c'ia, 1 kô-pür-nish'ia; 2 co-pür-nish'ia, n. Bot. A tropical American genus of handsome palms, including the wax-palm (C. cerifera). [< Copernicus, the astronomer.] Co-per'ni-cus, 1 kô-pür'ni-kus; 2 co-pür'ni-cus, n. [Nicholas (1473-1543).] A Polish astronomer. See COPERNICAN.
Co-per'ta, 1 kô-pür'ta; 2 co-pür'ta, n. [It.] Ceram. A varnish-like glazing for Italian majolica, which enhances the vividness of the colors.
cop'estone, 1 kô-p'et'stôn; 2 cöp'stôn, n. The top stone of a wall: one of the stones of a coping. [Phase.] co-ph'a-sal, 1 kô-f'hä-sal; 2 co-f'hä-sal, a. With or in the same cop'head, 1 kôp'hed; 2 cöp'hed, n. 1. A crest of feathers or tuft of hair on the head of a bird or an animal; a crested head. 2. [Dial. Eng.] A pointed or peaked head. [< cop, + head.] Co-phet'u-a, 1 kô-fet'yü-a; 2 co-fet'yü-a, n. In Percy's Reliques an African king who marries a beggar maid named Penelophon. His story is told in Tennyson's Beaugrenouille.
Co-ph'o-sis, 1 kô-f'hô-sis; 2 co-f'hô-sis, n. Med. Deafness; loss of hearing. [< Gr. köphôsis, < köphos, deaf, < köphô, smite.] publication or his work; or (3) when the nation or state of which he is a subject or citizen grants to citizens of the United States the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to its own citizens, or copyright protection substantially equal to the protection secured to such foreign author under their act by treaty, convention, or when such foreign state or nation is a party to an international agreement which provides for reciprocity in the granting of copyright, by the terms of which agreement the United States may, at its pleasure, become a party thereto. Publication of the work with the notice of copyright required by this act initiates copyright. By an amendment to the copyright law, in effect March 3, 1921, an ad interim copyright which endures for four months may be obtained for a book first published abroad in the English language, provided that one complete copy of the foreign edition be deposited in the copyright office not later than sixty days after its publication abroad. The British copyright law of July 22, 1902, defines musical copyright as the exclusive right of the owner of such copyright under the copyright acts in force for the time being to do or authorize another person to do all or any of the following things: (1) To make any kind of copies of such musical work. (2) To abridge such musical work. (3) To make any new adaptation, arrangement, or setting of such musical work, or of the melody thereof, in any notation or system. It defines printed musical work as any musical work so written, printed, or otherwise reproduced without the consent lawfully given by the owner of the copyright in such work. An act of Aug. 4, 1906, amending this law, imposes a fine upon a person convicted of knowingly violating it, and fine and imprisonment for repetition of the offense. The Copyright Act of 1911 confirms the acts of 1902 and 1906.—International copyright, an arrangement whereby authors of those countries which are parties to it may copyright their works in [any country included in the arrangement.

A vertical iron tube wrapped with straw and coated with loam, used as a core in casting guns, and by the circulation of water cooling the gun from the inside. — 2. Mining. A wrought-iron tube having spiral grooves along its length, for the escape of water and loose earth, up which the core passes; used in connection with a diamond drill. — c. bench, n. Founding. A bench where the small cores are made. — c. borer, n. Mining. A type of machine used in deep boring, embracing the diamond and other drills. — c. bit, n. Founding. A small rod, or mandril, which is made. — c. carriage, n. Founding. The car used to convey molds and cores to the oven to be baked. — c. disks, n. pl. Elec. Disks of thin iron of which armature-cores are built up by stringing a number together on a central shaft and keying them with nuts. Upon this cylindrical basis the wire is wound. — c. drill, n. Same as CORE-BORER. — c. drilling, n. The method of drilling by which a core is extracted from the rock pierced, and the strata determined. — c. extractor, n. Mining. An attachment to a core-barrel for loosening and raising the core. — c. filter, n. An instrument used to filtering up the core by an annular hole in a basket, to stop the sand and dirt which is carried back by eddy currents within the magnetic field of an alternating-current generator or dynamo. — c. machine, n. Founding. A hand-operated machine used in foundries, which presses prepared sand into forms suitable for cores. — c. peg, n. A bar or peg which holds together the several parts of a core which are placed on it and then fastened together. — c. piece, n. The core of a rope; the yarn run through its center to make it firm. — c. plate, n. A tubular plate made of thin cast iron used as a framework for large cores. — c. print, n. In casting, a piece projecting from a pattern, by which the metal is cast and supported. — c. raim, n. The rod, between the diameter of the insulator in cable and the mean diameter of the strand. — c. ring, n. An annular piece of cast iron used as a support for a core. It melts when the metal is poured over it and becomes incorporated in the core. — c. restle, n. A restle, usually made of metal having at the top V-shaped bearings, for supporting a core-bar while it is being shaped. — c. tube, n. 1. Same as CORE-BARREL. 2. A tube forming the inner wall of a built-up gun. — c. valve, n. A rotary plug valve. — c. vent, n. Founding. An opening in a core to allow the escape of air. — c. valve, n. A valve having a metal center and rim with cavities into which coqs may be driven or in which gear-teeth may engage. — hard c. (Civil Engin. & Arch.), hard material broken into pieces for use as a bottom layer in making roads, etc. — Krügk's c. (Elec.), a movable core of iron for use in magnetizing coils so shaped as to be attracted with approximate uniformity through a considerable range of positions. — laminated c. (Elec.), a core of an armature, induction coil, etc., made up of plates more or less perfectly insulated from each other by thin layers of shellacked paper, etc., thus preventing loss of efficiency due to eddy currents. — ribbon c. (Elec.), a core composed of iron ribbon to secure lamination and obviate eddy currents.

Co're, 1 kör; or kör; 2 cör or cör, n. Bib. Jude 11.

co're, 1 kör; + 2 cör-. From Greek korē, the pupil of the eye: a combining form.

Words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

cos'met'o-log'y, 1 kēz-met'ol'o-gi; 2 cōs-met'ol'o-gy, n. A treatise on bodily cleanliness and adornment. [Gr. kosmētōs (see COSMETIC) + -logy.] cos'mic, 1 kēz'mik; 2 cōs'mic, a. 1. Pertaining to the universe at large as a harmonious system, or to its laws and order; hence, harmonious; orderly: opposed to chaotic; as used by earlier writers, material, materialistic, or mechanical, as opposed to spiritual.

As a language he could try whether it was possible . . . to make the small section of the country which had fallen to himself cosmic and orderly. FRANCIS TWO CHIEFS p. 60. [S. 1889.]

2. Belonging to the material universe, especially that portion outside the solar system; as, cosmic changes.

Suns and planets and cosmic forces are the words in which His thoughts are written.

S. HARRIS Kingdom of Christ, p. 75. [W. F. D. 1888.]

3. Of a magnitude or extent in space or time suggesting those of the universe; of vast extent or duration.

As'ron. Occurring at or just before sunrise; as, the cosmic setting of a star; sometimes, but incorrectly, rising or setting with the sun: opposed to acronychal.

5. Relating to cosmism; as, the cosmic philosophy.

6. Geol. A term suggested by H. L. Fairchild for primitive massive rocks, to harmonize with the new planetesimal hypothesis. [< Gr. kosmos, < kosmos, universe.] cos'mic-cal, -cos'mic acid, acid used to bring out fingerprints on any material touched, as by thieves. — c. dust, fine particles supposed by some to be diffused in space, and to be the source of the dust found on snow, as in the arctic regions. — c. physics, astrophysics. — cos'mic-cal-ly, adv.

cos'mics, 1 kēz'miks; 2 cōs'mics, n. [Rare.] Cosmology.

cos'mism, 1 kēz'mizm; 2 cōs'mizm, n. 1. Philos. A theory of the cosmos or universe; specif., the doctrine of evolution as held by Herbert Spencer and formulated by John Fiske. 2. The theory of morals which makes human welfare the supreme good. See EVOLUTION. — cos'mist, n.

cos'mo, 1 kēz'mo; 2 cōs'mo. From Gr. kosmos, order; the universe: a combining form. — cos'mo-cr'as, n. Paleon. A genus of fossil ammonites from the Middle Oolite group of the English Jurassic.

cos'mo-chore, n. Mineral. Crystals of silicate minerals of the monoclinic type found in meteoric iron at Toluca, Mexico. — cos'mo-clas'ic, a. Composed of fragments of some extraterrestrial body; as, cosmoclastic rocks. — cos'mo-cr'as, n. 1. The power of the associated peoples of the world. 2. Government by such power. P. A. VAILE In The Globe, New York, Oct. 6, 1915. — cos'mo-cr'at, n. — cos'mo-cr'at'ic, a. cosmog. — cos'mo-cr'at'y, n.

cos'mo-ge-net'ic, n. Pertaining to the origin or genesis of the cosmos. — cos'mo-gen'ic, a.

cos'mo-g'no-sis, 1 kēz-mog'no-sis; 2 cōs-mōg'no-sis, n. The supposed world-knowledge or instinct of direction underlying the migratory and other movements of animals. [< Gr. kosmos, world, & gnōsis, knowledge.] cos'mog'o-ny, 1 kēz-mog'o-ny; 2 cōs-mōg'o-ny, n. [-NES, 1-niz; 2-nis, pl.] 1. A theory or account of the origin or present constitution and order of the world; a branch of cosmology; as, the Mosaic cosmogony; the cosmogony of Hesiod. The early Greek cosmogonies were fanciful deductions of all things from combinations of a few elements, or even from some single element, such as earth, air, water, or fire.

There are three general classes of cosmogonies—those which represent (1) the world as having existed in its present form from eternity, (2) the matter but not the form of the world as having existed from eternity (atomism, cosmism, evolutionism, etc.), and (3) both the matter and form of the world as having had a definite cause (creationism).

2. [Rare.] The creation or origin of the universe. [< Gr. kosmogonia, < kosmos, world; and see -GONY.]

— cos'mo-gon'ic, a. Of or pertaining to cosmogony.

— cos'mo-gon'ic-cal, -cos'mo-gon'ic-nist, n. One who holds a theory respecting the origin of the universe. — cos'mo-gon'ic-ly, adv.

cos'mog'ra-phy, 1 kēz-mog'ra-fi; 2 cōs-mōg'ra-fi, n. 1. The science that describes the universe, including astronomy, geography, and geology.

Cosmogony treats of the birth, cosmography of the description, and cosmology of the theory of the world.

2. The science that treats of the relations of the different parts of the universe. [< LL. cosmographia, < Gr. kosmographia, < kosmographos, describing the world, < kosmos, world, & graphō, write.] — cos'mo-graph'ic, a. Relating to cosmography. — cos'mo-graph'ic-cal-ly, adv.

cos'mo-labe, 1 kēz'mo-lēb; 2 cōs'mo-lāb, n. An astrolabe.

cos'mol'a-try, 1 kēz-mol'a-try; 2 cōs-mōl'a-try, n. Worship of the cosmos.

cos'mo-line, 1 kēz'mo-līn; 2 cōs-mō-līn, n. A variety of cos'mo-lin. — petroleum. Compare VASELINE. [< cosmo- (in COSMETIC) + -lin.] cos'mo-log'ic, 1 kēz'mo-lōg'ic; 2 cōs-mō-lōg'ic, a. Of or belonging to cosmology or the science of the universe; also, and more specifically, pertaining or relating to the nature and laws of the cosmos as an inhabited and alterable order of things; as, the cosmological argument; cosmological theory. — cos'mo-log'ic-ly, adv.

cos'mo-log'ic, n. The inference of the existence of God as the only conceivable explanation of the origin and development of the material universe. In its many forms this argument has emphasized either the derived or changeable, or dependent, or finite and temporal, or relative and phenomenal, or merely potential, character of the existing system of things, as proving demonstratively the need of God as First Cause. — c. proof, proof of the

cos'mol'o-gy, 1 kēz-mol'o-gi; 2 cōs-mōl'o-gy, n. [-GIES, 1-jiz; 2-gis, pl.] 1. The general science of the cosmos or universe, in all its parts, laws, and operations, so far as these can be known by observation and scientific inquiry and may be regarded as constituting a cosmos: opposed to ontology. 2. Philos. The philosophical theory, or philosophy, of the cosmos. Called also rational cosmology. See PHILOSOPHY. Cosmology, in this sense, embraces the theories of cosmogony, of cosmology proper, of the systems of nature and the supernatural, and of teleology. Cosmology proper, in philosophy, bases its theories on the fact that the cosmos is apparently made up of matter and its phenomena and minds and their phenomena. The philosopher may accept (1) both facts entire (realism, dualism); (2) the distinct existence of matter alone (materialism); (3) that of mind alone (idealism); (4) the non-existence of both as substances (phenomenalism); (5) the unknowableness of both (agnosticism); (6) the practical non-existence of both, with reference of their phenomena to sensation (idealistic phenomenalism); (7) the identification of two (monism, pantheism, etc.); (8) the absolute non-existence of both (nihilism); (9) the identification of pure being, as idea, with non-existence (hegelianism). [< COSMO- + -logy.] — cos'mol'o-gist, n. An expert in cosmology.

cos'mom'e-try, 1 kēz-mem'i-try; 2 cōs-mōm'e-try, n. The measurement of the universe or of the world; specifically, mapping out by lines of latitude and longitude.

cos'mo-nom'ic, 1 kēz'mo-nem'ik; 2 cōs-mō-nōm'ic, a. Pertaining to or derived from the laws of nature. [< COSMO- + Gr. nomos, law.]

cos'mo-path'ic, 1 kēz'mo-path'ik; 2 cōs-mō-pāth'ic, a. Psychical Research. Open to the access of supernatural knowledge or emotion, supposedly from a preternatural world. [Coined by F. W. H. Myers.] [< COSMO- + Gr. pathos, see PATHOS.] cos'moph'i-lite, 1 kēz-met'i-lait; 2 cōs-mōf'i-lit, n. A lover or admirer of the world in general. [< Gr. kosmos, world, & philo, love.] cos'mo-nog'ra-phy, 1 kēz'mo-nog'ra-fi; 2 cōs-mō-nōg'ra-fi, n. A proposed method of writing all languages in a common phonetic alphabet.

cos'mo-plast, 1 kēz'mo-plast; 2 cōs-mō-plāst, n. The Creator of the universe, regarded as its molder. [< Gr. kosmoplastēs, < kosmos, world, & plasseō, make.]

CRANIOMETRIC POINTS.
NAME.	Location.
a-can'thi-on <sup>s</sup> .....	Base of anterior nasal spine
an-tri-n <sup>o</sup> .....	Median frontal point farthest from inferior
as-ci-n <sup>o</sup> .....	Junction of occipital, parietal, and temporal bones
au-ric'u-la-re.....	Top of auricular opening
au-ric'u-la-r point.....	Center of auricular opening ba-si-on.....	Anterior border of foramen magnum, a median line
bra-ma.....	Where coronal and sagittal sutures meet

NAME.	Location.	NAME.	Course.
clit'-i-on . . . . .	Middle of anterior border of clavus	bi'-as-ter'-ic or bi'-as-ter'-ri-on'-ic di-am'-e-ter.	Between the two asteria
con-dyl'-i-on lat'-er-ale . . . . .	Lateral tip of condyle of jaw	bi'-au-ric'-u-lar di-am'-e-ter.	Between opposite auricular points
cor-o-na'-le . . . . .	On coronal suture at end of greatest frontal diameter	bi-con'dy-lar di-am'-e-ter.	Between the two condyles
co-ro-ni-on . . . . .	Tip of coronal process of jaw	bi-cor'o-nal di-am'-e-ter.	Between the two coronas
cro-ta-phi-on . . . . .	Tip of great wing of sphenoid	bi-ju'-gal di-am'-e-ter.	Between opposite jugal points
dac'-ry-on'-i . . . . .	Junction of lacrimal, maxillary, and frontal bones	bi-mas'toid di-am'-e-ter.	Between opposite malar points
eu'-ro-mi-on . . . . .	Tip of mastoid angle of parietal bone	bi-mas'toid di-am'-e-ter.	Between the two mastoidalia
eu'-ry-on . . . . .	End of greatest transverse diameter of skull	bi-pa'-ri-etal di-am'-e-ter.	Between opposite parietal protuberances
fron'-to-ma-la'-re or bi'-ta'-le . . . . .	At tubercle end of frontomalar suture	bi'-ste-phan'-ic di-am'-e-ter.	Between opposite stephanlia
fron'-to-ma-la'-re tem'-po-ra'-le . . . . .	At lateral end of frontomalar suture	bi-tem'-po-ra'-l di-am'-e-ter.	Between opposite posterior roots of zygomatic processes
fron'-to-ma-la'-re po-ra'-le . . . . .	At end of least transverse diameter of forehead	bi-zy-go-ma'-tic di-am'-e-ter.	Greatest diameter between zygomatic processes
gen'-i-on . . . . .	At apex of the inferior genial tubercles of lower jaw	Busk's di-am'-e-ter.	Auricular point to bregma, projection measurement
gla-bel'-la's . . . . .	The most prominent mid-point of glabella	cr'a-ni-o-fa'-cial ax'-is.	Median line through basiocephalic, basiphenoid, presphenoid and mesethmoid bones
gnath'-i-on * § . . . . .	Lower end of symphysis of jaw	Cruil's di-am'-e-ter.	Narrowest diameter of forehead go-ni-on § . . . . .	Where posterior and inferior borders of lower jaw meet	Dau'-ben-ton's line.	Optisthion to orbitale
hor'-mi-on . . . . .	Junction of posterior border of vomer with sphenoid, median line	den'-tal length.	Anterior surface of first premolar to posterior surface of last premolar
in'-i-on . . . . .	Occipital protuberance, median line	Door'-nik's hor'-i-zon'-tal.	Edge of upper medial incisors to occipital point in'-ter-su'-per-clit'-a-ry point . . . . .	Where line tangent to superciliary arches crosses median line	fa'-cial ax'-is.	Ethmosphe-noid junction to prosthion
ju'-ga'-le . . . . .	Junction of lines along borders of frontal and temporal processes of malar bone	fa'-cial di-am'-e-ter, trans'-verse, in-fe'-ri-or.	Between opposite gonlia
ju'-gal point . . . . .	On tubercle lower end of zygomaxillary suture	fa'-cial di-am'-e-ter, trans'-verse, mid'-dle.	Between opposite jugomaxillary points
ju'-go-ma'-x-i-lia-ry point . . . . .	Posterior angle of jugular process of occipital bone	fa'-cial di-am'-e-ter, trans'-verse, su'-pe'-ri-or.	Between opposite frontomalar temporal points
ju'-gu-lar point . . . . .	Where sagittal and lambdoid sutures meet	fa'-cial line.	Same as PROFILE LINE
lamb'-da § . . . . .	Upper end of symphysis of jaw, lingual surface	Got'-ting-en hor'-i-zon'-tal.	Tangent to upper margin of zygoma
ma-la'-re . . . . .	Most prominent point of malar bone	in'-ter-tu'-ber-al line.	Line to antihion
ma-lar point § . . . . .	Lowest point of mastoid process	in'-ter-tu'-ber-al line.	Between tubera frontalia
mas'-toi-da'-le . . . . .	Between the frontal prominences, median line	me'-s-i-al length.	Glabella to occipital point
me'-toi-pi-on . . . . .	Upper end of internasal suture	na'-so-sub-na'-sal line.	Nasion to acanthion
na'-sal point sup. . . . .	Between the two parietal foramina, median line	oc-ci-pi'-tal line.	Same as DAUBENTON'S LINE
na'-sion * § . . . . .	Posterior end of long diameter of skull, measured from glabella	pa'-la'-tal length.	Staphylion to orale
o-be'll-on § . . . . .	Where narrowest diameter of forehead crosses median line	pla'-no-spi'-nal line.	Ethmo-sphenoid junction to acanthion
oc-ci-pi'-tal point . . . . .	Posterior border of foramen magnum at median line	pro'-file line (Camper).	Touching most prominent points of upper and lower face
oph'-ry-on * § . . . . .	End of intermaxillary suture, oral surface of alveolar process	pro'-file line (German).	Ophryon to prosthion
o-ph'-thi-on . . . . .	Lowest point of inferior border of orbit	pro'-file line (Topk).	Intersuperciliary point to most prominent point of lower face
o-ra'-le . . . . .	Most anterior point on chin, median line	ra'-di-us fix'-us.	Hormion to inlion
or'-bi-ta'-le . . . . .	Median point posterior border of oral opening of incisive canal	Ro-lan'-dic line.	On external surface of cranium, connecting Rolandic points or'-bit-al point . . . . .	On anterior-inferior line between tragus of ear and condyle of jaw	sphe-noi'-dal di-am'-e-ter.	Least transverse diameter measured in temporal fossa
po-go-ni-on . . . . .	Lower end of intermaxillary suture, facial surface	su'-pra-or'-bi-tal line.	Tangent to upper edges both orbits
po'-ri-on . . . . .	Where great wing of sphenoid meets frontal, parietal, and temporal bones	Syl'-vi-an line.	On surface of cranium, from fronto-parietal eminence
pre'-au-ric'-u-lar . . . . .	Lower end of internasal suture	Vir'-chow's line.	Lambda to nasion
pro'-thi-on * § . . . . .	Where great wing of sphenoid meets frontal, parietal, and temporal bones	Yost's line.	Occipital point to prosthion
pter'-i-on * § . . . . .	1 cm. behind middle of arc joining nasion and inlion
rhin'-i-on . . . . .	5 1/2 cm. above zygoma on vertical from preauricular point
Ro-lan'-dic point, su'-pe'-ri-or . . . . .	Apex of petrous bone, inferior surface
Ro-lan'-dic point, in'-fe'-ri-or . . . . .	Apex of antero-inferior angle of parietal bone sal'-pin'-gi-on . . . . .	Posterior edge of hard palate at median line
sphen'-i-on . . . . .	Crossing of median and transverse palatine sutures sta-phy'-li-on . . . . .	End of least transverse diameter of skull taken in temporal fossa
stau'-ri-on . . . . .	Where coronal suture crosses the temporal crest
sten'-i-on . . . . .	On root of zygoma vertically above auricular point
su'-pra-au-ric'-u-lar point . . . . .	Upper end of symphysis of jaw, facial surface
sym-phys'-i-on . . . . .	Most prominent point of either frontal eminence tu'-ber-fron-ta'-le . . . . .	Most prominent point of either parietal eminence tu'-ber-pa'-ri-etal . . . . .	Anterior edge of optic groove at median line, interior of skull
tyl'-i-on . . . . .	Highest median point on vault of skull
ver'-tex . . . . .	End of greatest bizygomatic diameter
zy'-go-ma'-x-i-lia-ry point . . . . .	Lower end of zygomaxillary suture

A joint or cut, next below the chuck in a side of beef which runs horizontally.—c. road, n. 1. One of two or more roads that cross each other. 2. A road that crosses from one main road to another. Rome reached all her outposts by the most convenient roads; but for the most part she denied them the crossroads. CARR-SAID Rome ch. 80, p. 684. [n. 1879.] Compare CROSSROADS.—c. row, n. 1. The alphabet. See CHAIR-CROSSROADS.—c. row, n. 2. A row that intersects others.—c. row, n. 3. In whist, same as SEESAW. 2. A game of cards resembling whist.—c. sea, n. Naut. A sea that sets at an angle to the direction of the wind.—c. section, n. 1. Mech. A section of a body at right angles to its length; as, the cross-section of a girder. 2. Aero. In the section of an airplane wing, the fore-and-aft curvature to the line of the machine's progress.—c. section muffs, circular units of area, as the circular millimeter. See under UNIT.—c. septation, n. Bot. The septation or division of a cell or hypha by a transverse septum.—c. shunt, n. Elec. A shunt circuit having a branch on each side of the main circuit, as for the use of two relays.—c. sill, n. A railroad-sleeper lying under the rails transversely as a support to the stringer.—c. sleeper, n. Railroad. A tie of extra length intended to support several rails.—c. slide, n. A mechanical contrivance on which the tool-carriage or the work itself moves transversely to the main line of movement.—c. spale, n. One of the horizontal timbers used to brace a ship under construction.—c. spawl; c. spall; c. springer, n. Arch. A cross-rib in a groined vault.—c. staff, n. 1. A surveying-instrument consisting of a staff mounted with a brass circle, divided by cross-lines into four equal parts, and having upright sights at the extremities of the lines. 2. An instrument once used for taking the altitudes of the sun or stars: now superseded by the quadrant. 3. A crozier.—c. stitch, n. A double stitch in the form of a cross. Andromache worked roses in very modern cross-stitch. FAUPEL Short Studies, Homer in first series, p. 433. [s. 1872.] —c. stone, n. 1. Andalusite (variety chistolite or macle). 2. Staurolite. 3. Harmotome.—c. strap, n. Manège. A form of hobble made of leather and elastic.—c. stratification, n. Geol. The condition of having the minor strata dipping obliquely to the plane of the main stratum which they help to compose.—c. stratified, a.—c. stall, n. 1. A member similar to a cross-head, but at the opposite end of the cylinder from the crank. 2. A strong iron bar connecting the side-lever of a marine engine with the piston rod. 3. Arch. A tail formed by intersecting vertical and horizontal planes.—c. talk, n. In telephony, undesired partial or complete reproduction, in any circuit, of speech originating in one or more neighboring lines, due to induction between the respective circuits.—c. tie, n. A tie or sleeper connecting and supporting the parallel rails of a railroad.—c. toes, n. pl. A dowl-pla inserted to strengthen a frame previously tenoned.—c. valley, n. 1. A valley that is transverse to the general trend of a mountain range, as that of the Rhône. 2. A valley that intersects the strike of clippings strata transversely.—c. valve, n. Plumbing. A valve at the intersection of two pipes or the rectangular branching of one.—c. vaulting, n. Arch. The vaulting produced by the intersection of simple vaults, as groined vaulting. c. vault, c. vine, n. A woody vine of the southern United States (Bignonia capreolata). 30 to 50 feet long, with smooth reddish-brown bark and large red and orange flowers. The woody portions of the stem, seen in cross-section, are in the form of a cross.—c. walk, n. A walk intersecting a street or other highway.—c. way, n. A cross-road.—c. webbing, n. Webbing drawn across the saddle-tree to strengthen the seat of the saddle.—c. weed, n. Either of two mustard-like plants (Dipsacis tenuifolia), the wall-rocket and (D. muralis) the stinkweed.—c. wind, l. vt. In cotton-spinning, to reel yarn so that the fiber runs at an acute angle with the reel-shaft. II. vt. To separate from or start out of a plane, as a part of woodwork.—c. wire, n. 1. A wire crossing another. 2. One of two fine threads or strands, as of a spider's web, crossed in the center of the focal plane of an optical instrument, to define the exact point to which the readings of the circle or micrometer refer. cross, l. krös; 2. crös, n. 1. The emblem of Christianity, a symbolical representation of the instrument of punishment on which Christ died. The cross was once a gibbet, but it is now the highest name we have, because Ho hung on it. ROBERTSON Sermons third series, ser. x, p. 521. [n. 1870.] 2. An ancient instrument of torture on which criminals were fastened and exposed until they died from exhaustion: generally made of two timbers, an upright set into the ground and a crosspiece. 3. A sacred or mystic symbol in many ancient religions, supposed to have been originally emblematic of the union of the active and passive elements in nature. By one of the many strange coincidences in this meeting of two grades of culture so widely sundered, the cross was not only a Christian but also a Mexican symbol. FISKE Discovery of Am. vol. II, ch. 8, p. 250. [n. x. & co. 1892.] The cross as a sacred or mystic symbol dates from remote antiquity, and its use as an instrument of punishment is scarcely less ancient; but there was no connection between the two before Christianity. The symbolic cross, of many different shapes, may be resolved into four primitive forms: (1) The Greek cross found on Assyrian tablets, on Egyptian and Persian monuments, and on Etruscan pottery; (2) the crux decussata or oblique cross, vulgarly called St. Andrew's cross, no less common in ancient sculpture; (3) the Latin cross or crux immissa, found on monuments, coins, and medals before Christ; and (4) the tau cross, crux commissa, or patibularia, a mystic symbol of very ancient origin, probably a phallic emblem, thought by some archeologists to be the oldest form, the Greek cross being its double. (5) The crux ansata, the tau cross combined with a circle, as in the hands of Isis Osiris, and other Egyptian divinities, is the symbol of life and immortality. 4. That which resembles a cross or crucifix, as two lines crossing each other; as, he put a cross to his name. He can not write; but his cross is . . . honored by Jews as well as Christians. SCHILLER Piccolomini tr. by Coleridge, act II, sc. 13. 5. [C-] The crucifixion of Christ; the atonement. 6. [C-] The Christian religion; Christianity. 7. Something endured for Christ's sake; hence, any suffering; trial; tribulation; as, he bore his cross in silence. 8. Arch. A structure, often monumental and ornate, in the form of or surmounted by a cross, erected in some public place for devotional or memorial purposes. The principal types are boundary, market, preaching, and memorial or monumental crosses. 9. A mixing of varieties or breeds of animals; as, Alderney and Jersey make a good cross. Many cases are on record showing that a race may be modified by occasional crosses if aided by . . . careful selection. DARWIN Origin of Species ch. 1, p. 9. [n. 1884.] 10. The product of any crossing of strains; hence, humorously, anything that resembles or is intermediate between two other things; as, a cross between prose and poetry. 11. An old English coin stamped with a cross. 12. A pipe-fitting with two equal bores at right angles. 13. Her. (1) An ordinary produced by the Common Heraldic Crosses.

Plan of Curl- ing-rink.

curly, 1 kūr'l; 2 cūr'l-y, a. Having curls, coils, or eddies; rippled; kinky; wavy.—curly-grass, n. A small fern (Schizaea pusilla) with slender linear fronds, found in the pine-barrens of New Jersey, in Newfoundland, and Nova Scotia.—c-head, n. [U. S.] The silky clematis.—curly-pate, n. A curly-headed person, especially a child.—c-pated, a.

cur-mudg-eon, 1 kār-mu'jān; 2 cūr-mudg-eon, n. One who is miserly, grasping, or churlish; origin unknown, but perhaps derived from cur, a mean, ill-disposed person.

A rich old curmudgeon, who was noted for owning many houses and being a grating landlord. Invoiced Albamba, Adventure of the Mason p. 142. (a. p. p. 1865.)

—cur-mudg-eon-ly, a. Having the disposition of a curmudgeon; churlish; grasping.

cur-mur'ring, 1 kār-mur'ing; 2 cūr-mur'ing, n. [Scot.] A low murmuring or grumbling sound; especially, the rumbling of the bowels caused by wind. [Imitative.]

currn, 1 kūr'n; 2 cūr'n, n. [Scot.] 1. A grain of corn; any grain. 2. A very small portion; an indefinite number.—currn'y, a.

currn'berry, 1 kūr'n'bēr'y; 2 cūr'n'bēr'y, n. [RHS, 1-12; 2-13, pl.] (Prov. Eng.) A currant.

cur'nock, 1 kūr'nok; 2 cūr'nok, n. A variable dry measure formerly used in the west of England and in parts of south Wales. [W. cynnog] cor'nock.

cur'plin, 1 kūr'plin; 2 cūr'plin, n. [Scot.] A fowl's rump.

cur'pon, 1 kūr'p; 2 cūr'p, n. [Scot.] Buttocks; crupper.

curr, 1 kūr; 2 cūr, n. [Prov. Eng. & Scot.] To coo, or purr; or hoot like an owl.

curr, n. [Prov. Eng. & Scot.] To cinge.

curr'rack, 1 kūr'rah; 2 cūr'rah, n. [Scot.] 1. A coracle. 2. [Scot.] A wickerwork cart; also a pair of panniers made of wood, slung over a horse to carry bulky loads. 3. A small wickerwork boat covered with hides, formerly used in Scotland and Ireland. cor'rack; cor'rag; cor'ragh; cur'rack; cur'ragh; cur'roh.

Cur'ragh, 1 kūr'rah; 2 cūr'rah, n. A plain in Kildare county, Ireland; 4,533 acres; British military camp; race course.

cur'ta-jong, 1 kūr'ta-jōn; 2 cūr'ta-jōn, n. [Austral.] Any one of various Australian and Tasmanian fibrous plants, as the brown currajong (Commersonia echinata), of the cola-nut family; green c. (Hibiscus heterophyllus), and Tasmanian c. (Plagianthus sidosoides), of the mallow family.

Cur'ran, 1 kūr'an; 2 cūr'an, John Philpot (1715-1794) (1817). An Irish barrister; orator and wit; member of the Irish House of Commons; master of the rolls in Ireland.

cur'ran, 1 kūr'an; 2 cūr'an, n. A manx boat for use at sea. [Co. Ir. Gael. currahan, boat].

cur'rant, 1 kūr'ant; 2 cūr'ant, n. 1. A small round berry of any species of Ribes, a genus of the saxifrage family (Saxifragaceae), without prickles and growing in racemose clusters; also, a shrubby bush producing it.

The best-known species are (1) the red (R. rubrum), with its variety the white; (2) (a) the wild (native) black (R. fruticosum) and (b) the cultivated black (R. nigrum); and (3) the golden, buffalo, flowering, or Missouri (R. aureum), cultivated for ornament.

2. A small seedless raisin imported from the Levant; called usually dried currant and Zante currant. 3. [V. Ind.] The fruit of any one of various shrubs or trees, as those of the genus Citellus; also, the shrub or tree bearing the fruit. 4. Same as NATIVE CURRANT. [Gr. Corinthe, Corinth, & L. Corinthus, & Gr. Korinthos, Corinth, whence they were brought.] curr'ent.

—clove-cur'rant, n. The buffalo-currant.—cur'rant-bor'er, n. A larval insect that bores into the stem of currant-bushes, as a clearing moth (Egeria tipuliformis) or a cerambycid beetle (Pseudoceros supernotatus).—c-bush, n. [Austral.] The warbler-bush.—c-endropia, n. A moth (Prionoxystus armatarius), native of America, which feeds on currant-leaves.—c-fly, n. A trypetid fly (Eophranta canadensis) whose larva lives inside red and white currants and causes premature ripening and decay.—c-gall, n. [Brit.] A small globular gall of the European oak, formed by a cynipid (Spathegaster bacarum).—c-moth, n. A geometrid moth, Abraxas or Eufithecia ribicaria in the United States, A. grossulariella in England.—c-scale, n. A white bark-louse (Pulvinaria ribicaria), common on currant-bushes.

—c-worm, n. A larval insect destructive to currants, as a European saw-fly (Nematus ventriosus) introduced into the United States, a currant-moth (Abraxas or Eufithecia ribicaria), and an American saw-fly (Prionoxystus armatarius), all destructive to the leaves, and a fly, called the c. fruit-fly (Eophranta canadensis), destructive to the fruit.—Indian c. [Isidura, n. native c. [Austral.], any one of various trees or shrubs or their acid currant-like fruits; as (1) any one of several species of Coprosma, especially C. ballardii; (2) any one of several species of Leptomeria, broom-like shrubs of the sandalwood family; (3) the cockatoo-bush or blueberry (Myoporum laetifolium); (4) a shrub (Leucopogon trichos) of the epacrid family, common in most parts of Australia.—plain c. [Isidura, n. native c. [Austral.], any one of various trees of the linden family (Tillaceae), or the tree.

cur'ren-cy, 1 kūr'en-si; 2 cūr'en-cy, n. [FRS, 1-12; 2-13, pl.] 1. The accepted and current medium of exchange of values; that which is in general use and circulation, as money, as coin or bank-notes, or government notes; also, the total amount in circulation; properly not including bank-checks.

It was apparent that the volume of currency in the country was not sufficient for the enormous requirements of the public expenditure.

NICOLAY AND HAY Lincoln vol. vi, ch. 11, p. 230. [c. co. 1890.]

2. The state of being current; general circulation; as, the currency of paper money; the currency of a rumor.

3. Current value or estimation; general esteem or standing; as, to gain currency without desert.

4. Formerly, the current medium of exchange of the world, it would still be abundantly worth while to continue to enjoy it by oneself. MATTHEW ARNOLD Essays in Criticism second series, essay i, p. 55. [MACM. 1888.]

5. Formerly, the current medium of exchange of the Australian colonies. 5. Continuous flow, as of a stream; glibness of speech. [LL. currentia, < L. curren(-i); see CURRENT. SYN: see MONEY.

—asset currency (Finance), currency issued under the security of general assets, merchants' bills, etc., as distinguished from that secured by deposits, as of government bonds.—c. principle or doctrine (Finance), the principle that banks should be allowed to issue paper-money or bullion or coin. It was made a feature of the act of Parliament of 1844 that regulated the note issue of the bank of England. This principle is opposed to the banking principle or doctrine under which bank-notes are held to be a form of credit and permit of an elasticity of currency.—divisional c. (Finance), currency divided for immediate relief in periods of financial panic or anxiety, and restricted to the payment of the obligations of the government.—flexible c. (Finance), currency which is regulated by existing business requirements, being made to increase or decrease in accordance with their demands. elastic c.—fractional c., money or coins of any denomination less than the standard monetary unit: in the United States, less than a dollar.—paper c., paper issued on the authority of a state and designed to serve as money; government notes and bank-bills issued under authority of law.

cur'rent, 1 kūr'ent; 2 cūr'ent, a. 1. Passing from hand to hand or from mouth to mouth, as money or as news; circulating or circulated; generally accepted as valid, authentic, or true.

SYN: see AUTHENTIC; POPULAR.—to pass current, to be generally accepted or recognized.

cur'ent, n. 1. A continuous movement in the same direction, as of a fluid; flow; stream; also, the fluid that is in motion; as, a current of air or water.

lar when they are placed in connection.—charging-c., n. Auto. The current used to charge the accumulator of an electric vehicle.—Chilean c., same as PERUVIAN CURRENT.

—commuted c. (Elec.), a current that at the point of generation is alternating, but is changed to a continuous current by a commutator.—connectional c., a vertical current in gases and liquids resulting from the variation in temperature at the different levels.—constant c. (Elec.), a direct or alternating current whose effective intensity is constant.—continuous c. (Elec.), a direct current whose intensity is uniform.—c-bedding, n. Same as FALSE BEDDING. See BEDDING, n.—c-bottle, n. Oceanography. A bottle cast into the sea for the purpose of making observations on the direction and speed of currents. In such bottles is sealed a statement showing their purpose and requesting their return.—c-collector, n. Elec. Any mechanism, as a brush or a trolley, by means of which current is carried from moving to fixed portions of a circuit and reversely.—c-density, n. Elec. The quantity of current passing in any part of a circuit, as compared with the area of cross-section of the conductor at that point.

—c-density, n. Elec. Current-density, as determined by the quantity of electricity passed by such current in a given time. Its practical unit is the ampere.—c-meter, n. 1. Elec. An instrument, as a galvanometer, for measuring the strength of an electric current. 2. A device for determining the velocity of flowing water, as in deep-sea currents.—c of injury (Elec.), the current generated at the site of an injury to a muscle nerve, which becomes negatively electrified in relation to the surrounding uninjured surface.—currents of motion (Electrotherapeutics), currents set up in living nerves or muscles after sudden contraction or relaxation.—currents of rest (Electrotherapeutics), the electric currents set up when two portions of an unstimulated nerve or muscle are placed in connection. Their existence is not universally accepted.—c-wheel, n. Hydraul. A water-wheel driven by an open stream of water, as distinguished from one in a race or penstock.—derived c. (Elec.), a current flowing through a derived conductor; a shunt current.—dielectric c. (Elec.), same as DISPLACEMENT CURRENT.—direct c. (Elec.), a current that is constant in direction, as distinguished from an alternating current.—direct induced c. (Elec.), the extra current produced on opening a circuit. See EXTRA CURRENT.—discharging c. (Elec.), the current obtained from a charged condenser or storage-battery.—displacement c. (Elec.), the theoretical current which flows through an insulating material or dielectric when an electromotive force is impressed upon it, producing displacement and interior stress.—earth currents (Physics), light electric currents apparently traversing the earth's surface, but which in reality only exist in a wire grounded at both ends, due to small potential differences between the two points at which the wire is grounded.—eddy c. (Elec.), a current produced in a solid conductor, such as the armature or pole-piece of a dynamo or motor, which is wasted by conversion into heat. To obviate this loss armature-cores are often laminated.—energy c. (Elec.), same as ACTIVE CURRENT.—extra c. (Elec.), a current of very brief duration but great intensity, produced by electromagnetic induction at the moment of opening or closing a circuit. In the former case it is in the same direction as the ordinary current, and in the latter in the opposite direction to the ordinary current.—Faradic c. (Electrotherapeutics), an induced or secondary alternating current such as that derived from a magneto-generator; opposed to galvanic current.—Foucault c. (Elec.), same as EDDY CURRENT.—Franklinic c. (Electrotherapeutics), the current generated by an electrostatic machine.—galvanic c. (Electrotherapeutics), same as VOLTAIC CURRENT.—galvanic c. (Oceanography), a current flowing eastward along the coast in a direction contrary to the equatorial Atlantic current.—Hermann's demarcation c. (Elec.), same as CURRENT OF INJURY.—Humboldt c., same as PERUVIAN CURRENT.—idle c. (Elec.), wattless current; former name.—induced c. (Elec.), 1. The current produced in a conductor by varying the conditions of the field of force in which it is situated, as by movement. 2. A current produced by induction, the force being opposed to the direction of the primary current.—induced currents are induced by closing a circuit whose direction is opposite to that of the producing current. See INDUCTION.—intermittent c. (Elec.), an interrupted direct current.—inverse c. (Elec.), same as INDUCED CURRENT. 2.—Japan c. (Oceanography), a current flowing from a point near the Bashi Islands northward to latitude 26°, where it divides, the main part washing the eastern shores of Japan and then the Aleutian Islands.—leakage c. (Elec.), a term formerly used for the exciting current of a transformer, that is, the very slight current passing through the primary circuit when the secondary circuit is open, owing to the counter-electromotive force developed.—local c. (Elec.), same as EDDY CURRENT.—magnetic c. (Elec.), magnetic flux; the total number of lines of force passing through a magnetic circuit.—magnet and break c. (Elec.), a series of small current impulses of short duration separated by momentary intervals in which no current flows.—marking c. (Telegr.), the current recording dot and dash symbols on the paper ribbon in the polarized receiver of Wheatstone's automatic telegraph.—molecular c. (Elec.), same as AMPERIAN CURRENT. See AMPERIAN.—muscle-c., n. Neurol. Same as CURRENTS OF REST.—muscle c. (Elec.), a current of water whose dynamic energy represents one pneumatoc.—power c., n. Elec. Same as ACTIVE CURRENT.—primary c. (Elec.), the current passing through the primary coil of any inductive device and giving rise to an induced current; any originating, as opposed to a derived or secondary, current.—pulsating c. (Elec.), a current whose intensity changes in a regular interval, but whose direction is constant.—pulsatory c.—reflex c. (Elec.), that component of an alternating current which is in quadrature with the electromotive force.—rectified c. (Elec.), same as COMMUTED CURRENT; so called because the undulations of the sine curve representing an alternating current, which normally Dutchmaster. Native name. Gou-fu-cu-cu.

Cush, 1 kush; 2 Cush, n. 1. A son of Ham; lived about 2250 B. C. 2. A Benjamite in David's time. 3. The descendants of Cush; hence, the Ethiopians. 4. Ethiopia.

Cu'shan-rish 'a-tha'im, 1 k'u'shan-rish 'a-thē'im; 2 cu'shān-rish 'a-thā'im, n. Bib. (R. V.). Judges II. 10.
cush'at, 1 kush'at or kush'at; 2 cūsh'at or cūsh'at, n. The ring-dove (Columba palumbus). [< AS. cūscate, perhaps < cūc, quick, & scētan, shoot.] cu-shaw', 1 kiu-shā' or ku-shō'; 2 cū-shā' or cū-shā', n. A variety of the crookneck squash. [< Algonkian cūshaw.] ca-shaw'.
cush'ew-bird', 1 kush'ū-būrd'; 2 cūsh'ū-būrd', n. The galeated curassow. [< cūshew (imitative word) + bird.] Cu'shī, 1 k'u'shī; 2 cū'shī, n. Bib. 2 Sam. xviii. 21.
cush'le-doo', 1 kush'ū-dū'; 2 cūsh'ū-dū', n. [Scot.] The cushion.
Cush'ing, 1 kush'ing; 2 cūsh'ing, n. 1. Caleb (1/1800-1/1879), an American jurist; diplomat; counsel for the United States at Geneva on Alabama claims, 1872. 2. Thomas (1/1725-1/1788), an American patriot; member of 1st and 2d Continental Congresses. 3. William (1/1732-1/1810), an American lawyer; judge of U. S. Supreme Court. 4. William B. (1842-1/1874), a United States naval officer; destroyed the Confederate ironclad "Albemarle" by torpedo.
cush'ion, 1 kush'ion; 2 cūsh'ion, v. I. t. 1. To place, seat, or arrange on or as on a cushion. 2. To provide, cover, or protect with a cushion or cushions, for any purpose. 3. Mach. To compress (exhaust-steam or other motive fluid) by closing the exhaust-outlet of a cylinder. 4. To suppress. II. i. In billiards, to make the cue-ball strike the cushion before contact with the second object-ball, either before or after hitting the first.

cyc'clone, 1 sa'k'lon; 2 cyc'clon, n. 1. Meteor. A system of winds circulating about a center of relatively low barometric pressure, and, at the earth's surface, blowing spirally inward: a term introduced into meteorology by H. Piddington, in 1848. Compare ANTICYCLONE.

The circulatory motion is in the direction of the hands of a clock in the southern hemisphere, and in the contrary direction in the northern hemisphere. The whole system has generally, but not always, a motion of translation, which is usually easterly except within the tropics. The cyclones of temperate latitudes cover hundreds, or even thousands, of square miles; they are not necessarily stormy, but are generally attended by cloudy weather with rain or snow. They occur at all seasons. Those of the tropics cover a smaller area, are characterized by stronger (generally violent) winds, and chiefly occur during a particular season of the year.

Cyclone, as indicated on a weather-map of the United States.

A cyclone, or "low," is central north of the Lake Region; its northern half extends beyond the limits of the map. An anticyclone, or "high," overlies the Rocky Mountain slope.

The characteristic circulation of the wind "counterclockwise" around the cyclone-center, and with a tendency to turn inward, is shown by the arrows. The cyclone here illustrated was attended by moderate winds, cloudy weather, and rain; it was not a storm.

2. Meteor. A cyclonic storm; a cyclone characterized by crowded isobars and strong winds. In this sense the term is most frequently applied to the cyclones of the torrid zone, known also as tropical cyclones, hurricanes, typhoons, or baguios.

Not one of the 441 cyclones which have been registered [in the Philippines] from 1880 to 1900, inclusive, has been observed in the month of February. [J. A. Loefer The Cyclones of the Far East 2d ed., ch. 9, p. 86. In J. R. 1904.]

3. Popularly, any violent and destructive wind-storm, especially (in the United States) a tornado. 4. Astron. A violent rotary storm in the sun's atmosphere. [Gr. kytlon, ppr. of kyklos, whirl round, & kyklos, circle.] Syn: hurricane, tornado, typhoon, whirlwind.

cy-'i-'co-'o-my, 1 sal-i-'ko-'o-my; 2 cy-'i-'co-'o-my, n.
Surg. The operation of cutting the ciliary muscle of the eye. [Gr. kyliz, cup, & tomē, cutting.]
cy-'i-'der, 1 sal-i-'der; 2 cy-'i-'der, n. To press or to fit with a cylinder.
cy-'i-'n'ä, n. 1. A solid whose curved bounding surface is generated by the motion of a straight line at a given angle around two equal circles in parallel planes, the two circles forming the remainder of the boundary:
called a right cylinder when the line is at right angles to the planes, an oblique cylinder when it is not; in the higher geometry, applied to any curved surface generated by the motion of a straight line remaining parallel to itself and constantly intersecting a curve.
2. Mech. Any cylindrical portion of a machine, especially if hollow, and proportioned so that the length somewhat exceeds the diameter. Specif.: (1) A cylindrical member of a steam-engine, in which a piston moves and receives direct impact from the motive fluid.
(2) A rotating cylindrical portion of a printing-press; as, the impression-cylinder or the ink-cyl; also, a cylinder press; in calico-printing, the roller engraved with a pattern.
(3) A gun-bore. (4) In a revolver, the rotating chamber that holds the cartridges.
(5) In a loom, a flat-sided revolving block over which the carriage passes. (6) In a carding-machine, a large card-clothed front-head; a. gland; i. lap; p. of a winding frame. (8) Chem. A cylinder of some form of electrical machinery. (9) Valve; a wooden bucket for the safe conveyance of a cartridge to a large gun. (10) In watchmak-ing, the cylindrical recess which controls the escape-wheel of a watch.
Steam-engine cylinders are named from their use, mechanism, or location; as, inside cylinder (in a smoke-box or between frames, as of a locomotive), oscillating c., overhanging c., reversing c., starting c., etc. Printing-press cylinders are named (1) from their purpose, as, rolling c. (for separating a sheet from a roll of paper), delivery c. (for delivering the printed sheets), impression c., ink-c., plate c. (for holding curved stereotype plates), type-c., etc.; and (2) from their form; as, drum

c., strawboard tube used as a protective covering, as for pictures, photographs, etc., sent by mail. 4.
Archeol. (1) A cylindrical stone with a cuneiform or hieroglyphic inscription, used as a seal or amulet. (2)
A commemorative tablet of clay with a cuneiform inscription, found buried under the corners of edifices in Babylonia and Assyria. 5. Bot. A plant-stem boundary established by a different tissue.
In angiosperms, pith, wood, and bark are regarded as representing, respectively, a central, a cortical, and a dermal cylinder.
6. A portable timepiece on the sun-dial principle.

-comb-'cy-'i-'n'ä, n. Mech. A revolving cylinder which is one of the parts of a cotton-combing machine. -cy-'i-'
-band, n. In the spectrum analysis of certain metals, a band representing a half-cylinder lighted on one side.
-core, n. 1. The bore of a cylinder, as of a steam-engine. 2. A gun with a bore of uniform diameter. -c-.
-cake, n. Sodium sulfate molded by making common salt and sulfuric acid in cylindrical retorts and heating the mixture. -c-. cock, n. A cock attached to a steam-cylinder, through which water may be blown out. -c-.
-condensation, n. Steam-engine. The partial condensation of steam on entering a cylinder, owing to contact with walls covered by the previous exhaust. -c-. cover, n. 1.
Usually, in a steam-engine, the steam-tight cover at that end of a cylinder through which the piston passes. 2.
[Rare]. The lagging or jacket about a steam-cylinder to lessen radiation. -c-. face, n. In a steam-cylinder, the inner bore in which the piston moves. -c-. feed, n. The amount of steam per stroke that passes through an engine's cylinder. -c-. gate, n. 1. A tool by which the opening in the cylinder of an escapement is measured. 2. A steam-gate which is attached to the cylinder of a steam-engine.
3. A hollow cast-iron cylinder for testing the accuracy of the finished bore of a gun. -c-. gate, n. A cylindrical valve controlling the water-supply to a turbine. -c-. grinder, n.
A grinding-machine having an automatic cross-feed for finishing cylindrical gages. -c-. head, n. The metal plate or cover closing the end of a cylinder. -c-. lock, n. A lock fitted with a rotating cylinder which revolves after the tumblers with which it is fitted have been sprung and thus permits of its being opened with a key. -c-. machine, n.
See CYLINDER-ENGINE, UNDER ENGINE. -c-. metal, n. An cylinders. -c-. mill, n. A grinding-mill fitted with rollers in place of pistons. -c-. oil, n. A lubricating-oil or mixture of oils, used especially for the piston moving in an engine's cylinder. -c-. passage, n. A steam-port. -c-. port,

-n. An opening for the passage of motive fluid to or from a cylinder. -c-. powder, n. Gunpowder of which charcoal carbonized in cylindrical iron retorts is an ingredient. -c-.
-press, see PRINTING-PRESS. -c-. pressure, n. The pressure exerted upon a piston by the tension of the propelling fluid. -c-. principle, n. The process by which a cylinder is produced upon a large and several smaller cylinders being used, the latter having the patterns engraved upon them. -c-. relief, n. A pipe through which water collecting in a steam-cylinder is drained away;
a relief-valve. -c-. snail, n. A cylindroid gastropod of the West Indies, etc. -c-. snake, n. A harmless cylindroid pholid snake, as Cylindrophis rufa of Java, or the Guiana coral-snake (Hylex scyale). -c-. staff, n. An implement for measuring the length of a gun-bore and watch, a watch having a cylinder escapement. -c-. wrench, n. A pipewrench. displacement, n. Engin. An extra cylinder in a gas-engine which receives the charge, whence it is transferred into the main or working cylinder. -low-'pressure
-c-, the largest and last of the cylinders of a multiple-expansion engine. -outside -c-, same as OVERHANGING CY-linder. -overhanging -c-, a locomotive-cylinder which projects beyond the frame. -porcupine -c-, same as PORCU-pine.

Syn.: decease, demise, departure, dissolution. Death is the general term for the cessation of physical life of every grade; the other words as applied almost without exception to human beings. Dissolution, which refers strictly to the breaking up of that harmony and unity which existed in the body as a living organism, has a possible application to lower forms of life. Decease is the legal and formal word for the termination of human life; demise is a rare word, formerly used only of monarchs. Departure expresses the religious idea of the soul simply leaving its earthly tabernacle to enter upon immortality. — Ant.: birth, immortality, life, vitality. — civil death, the total deprivation of civil rights and standing, as by a life imprisonment, etc. — death's-ad'cer, phis antarcical of the family Elapidae, with immovable poisonous fangs, its tail ends in a thorn-like tip wrongly regarded as a deadly weapon. — d. agony, n. The last struggle; pains of death. — d. angle, n. An angle in a fortification or line of battle, generally salient, made memorable by destructive fighting. — d. bed, n. The bed on which one dies; the mortal illness; last hours of life: used adjectively. — d. bed deed (Scots Law), a deed made by a person suffering from a malady ending in death within sixty days of the date of the grant. — Until 1871, such a deed, without the payment of debts referred to by the heir, was voidable. — d. bell, n. 1. The change of endings undergone by nouns, pronouns, and adjectives to express their different relations of gender, person, number, and case, as Jacob,

The word clin means "falling"; declension, a "falling down"; and the two were applied because that form of the noun used as the subject of a sentence was supposed to be represented by a perpendicular line (axis rectus), and the other forms by those sloping from that line.

(2) The act of inflecting words thus. (3) A class of words thus inflected; as, the first or second declension in Latin. See case. (4) The process of falling or sinking lower; decline; demotion; as, the declension of the sovereign's power. 5. The act of declining; rejection; non-acceptance; declination. 6. A slope; incline; di-clivity. 7. (1) Same as MAGNETIC DECLINATION. (2)

The act or state of bending, sloping, or moving downward; inclination; descent; slope; as, a declination of the head; declination of a hillside. 2. A falling off, decline, or demotion, as from a high condition of vigor, morality, etc.; decay. 3. [U.S.] The act or state of refusing or declining; refusal; non-acceptance; a declinat- ure, as, the declination of a proffered honor. 4. Deviation, as from a straight course, a right line, or right condition. 5. Same as MAGNETIC DECLINATION. 6.
Astron. The angular distance of a heavenly body from the celestial equator, being the angle that a line drawn from the earth to a celestial body makes with the plane of the equator.

As declination is referred to the plane of the terrestrial equator projected to the sky, it is the exact equivalent of the celestial latitude of a star. [F. déclinaison, < L. declinare, v. 5, ch. 2, p. 178.

7. Same as DECLINATION or PLANE. 8. Optic. A lineating of the vertical position of the eye to the right or to the left of a true vertical position. 9. Grav. Declination; inclination. [L. declinatio], < declinare, pp.
of declino, decline, < dē, down + clinere, lean.] —angle of declination, the angle of departure made by a descending line or plane with a horizontal plane.—d. compass, a compass arranged for measuring the variation of the magnetic needle.—d. of a plane (Dipster), the angle between the vertical circle and the plane (if reckoned from east or west, or bearing) meridian and the plane of horizon from which the body's magnetic d. is taken; between the direction in which the magnetic needle points and the true meridian.

de-cli-na-tional, 1 dē-klī-nā-shən-āl; 2 dē-klī-nāshun-āl, see POTENT.]

e-l'p-ra, 1 dī'p-rā; 2 dē'l'p-rā, n. An Anglian kingdom, extending from the Humber to the Tyne. See NORTHUMBRIA.
e-l'p-thre, 1 dē'thre; 2 dē'thre, n. Ir. Folklore. The ward of Conchubhar, king of Ulster, who fell from heaven to Scotland with Naisle and the Clan Ua. Returning with Naisle to Ireland, the men were treacherously slain by the king and Deirdre died of a broken heart: sometimes called Dar'thray or Dar'ra-thray in the Highlands of Scotland. Dēl'drat.
I. 1 dīs; 2 dēs, n. [Scot.] A dale.
ism, 1 dī'izm; 2 dē'izm, n. 1. Belief in God as personal Spirit, in distinction from atheism and materialism.
2. Belief in a personal Divine Being, but with the denial of those beliefs in the supernatural and the miraculous which characterize Christian and other forms of theism.
While agreeing in the attempt to establish so-called natural religion on a rational basis, the English and Continental schools of deistic belief assumed various attitudes toward the prevalent theistic doctrines of their time; hence the word.
Deism has been used in various senses, as, (1) belief in an Intelligent and eternal Being, with denial of providence and moral government; (2) belief in God and providence, with denial of moral distinctions and moral government;
(3) belief in God and his moral government, with denial of providence; (4) belief in God, with denial of an infinite force inherent in matter, as the first cause, with denial of a free personal God: (5) more commonly, that given in the definition.
See K. F. Vocab. Philos. p. 130. [su. & co. 1878.]
The doctrines were first promulgated in England during the end of the 17th century and passed through various phases which were given expression to in the time to time by such prominent deists as John Locke, the author of Cherbury (1581-1642), John Toland (1670-1722), John Toland (1670-1722), Lord Shaftesbury (1671-1713), Antenor Collins (1670-1722), Matthew Tindal (1675-1733), and La d' Bellingbroke (1678-del'ta, 1 del'ta, 2 del'ta, n. 1. The fourth letter in the Greek alphabet (Δ, δ). See illus. under ALPHA-BET. 2. An alluvial deposit formed at the mouth of a river; so called from its frequent resemblance to the capital letter Δ. The term delta covers any deposit at the mouth of a river due to attrition or erosion.

While rapid streams frequently form stony deltas, the most prominent examples are composed of the fine silt carried down by large rivers of gentle slope, which split into numerous mouths as they reach the sea. Fan deltas are alluvial deposits distributed by streams debouching from narrow gorges into broad valleys, such as that at the foot of the rm, Rosetta mouth; M. Boor-mountain enclosing the pla-lake; d. Damietta; d. M. Dams-teau of the Great Salt Lake in Iowa mouth; ps, Port Said; ml, Utah. Where the tributary is Menzaleh lake; i, Ismailia; c, rapid the fan delta frequently Cairo; s, Suez. The Suez canal extends from Port Said to Suez, pushes the main stream against the opposite wall of the valley, or blocks it and forms a lake, as Lake Peplin, where the Chippewa runs into the Mississippi.

Delta of the Nile.

All great rivers, as the Nile, the Mississippi, the Ganges, the Danube, have their deltas; but the largest river in the world, the Amazon, is an exception to this rule.

The error thus conveyed or believed. 3. Pathol. & Psychol. A rooted false belief with regard to objective things; a persistent form of mental obliquity.

A delusion is a false opinion about a matter of fact, which need not necessarily involve, though it often does involve, false perceptions of sensible things. WILLIAM JAMES Principles of Psychology vol. ii, p. 114. [u. & co. 1901.]

Delusions are divided by pathologists into two classes: (1) systematized delusions, in which there is habitual correlation to the subject's surroundings, but in which the reasoning and deductions are false, a condition of the chronically insane; and (2) unsystematized delusions, in which there is no such correlation. Delusions generally belong to certain clearly defined types, such as delusion of grandeur, insane belief in one's rank, wealth, importance, etc.; d. of negation, insane belief that some part of the body is non-existent; d. of persecution, insane belief that one is the victim of slander, surveillance, etc.; and expansive d., insane belief that one is some great person in the field of politics, religion, etc.

4. Law. A false conception and persistent belief, unconquerable by reason, of what has no existence in fact. Delusions of mental and moral insanity, the presence of delusion on a subject under judicial investigation is the test of insanity under English and American decisions. 5. The act of deluding or leading into mental error; imposition; deception. [< L. delusio (n.), < deludo, < de, off, + ludo, play.]

Syn.: hallucination, illusion. An illusion may be wholly of the senses; a delusion always involves some mental error, faulty reasoning process, or one of several mistaken inferences. In an optical illusion the observer sees either what does not exist, or what exists otherwise than as he sees it, as when in a mirror distant springs and trees appear close at hand. We speak of the illusions of fancy or of hope, but of the delusions of the insane. A hallucination is an extremely projected image or belief which has no corresponding reality to warrant it, altho something objective may suggest and determine it; as, the hallucinations of delirium tremens. See ABERRATION; DECEPTION. — Ant.: certainty, fact, reality, truth, verity. — de-lu'sion-al, a. 1. Consisting of or marked by delusions; as, delusional mania. 2. II. 1. To inquire urgently, peremptorily, or by authority.

I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me. Job xl. 7. [< F. démander, < LL. demando, < L. de, from, and see MANDATE.] Syn.: ask for, call for, claim, insist upon, require. — Ant.: abandon, decline, forego, give up, waive.

— de-mand-a-bl(e), a. That may be claimed or demanded. — de-mandant, n. Law. One who demands; the plaintiff in a real action; any plaintiff. — de-mand'er, n. — de-mand'ess, n.

de-mand, n. 1. A request as by right or authority; claim; exaction; requisition; as, the demands of one's employer, or of one's employees. 2. A requirement supported by a threat of violence or a display of force; as, the demands of a footpad. 3. A desire to obtain; earnest seeking; call; as, a great demand for fiction. 4. Econ. (1) The desire to possess combined with the ability to purchase. (2) The totality of such effectual desire in a given market with reference to a given commodity at a certain price.

The term effectual demand is used by Adam Smith to denote the will and ability of a group of individuals to pay the natural price for a commodity, that is, such a price as will enable the vendors to keep it upon the market at a reasonable profit to themselves. Demand and supply, the relation in trade between the desire to sell and the desire to purchase, or between the quantity of a commodity purchased and the quantity offered for sale, is the factor which determines price. Yet it is itself reacted upon by a change in prices. By the law of demand and supply, if in a given market the supply of any commodity is increased while the demand remains stationary, the price necessarily falls; on the other hand, if the demand increases without a corresponding increase in the supply, the price will rise. This law is, however, only one of several factors which regulate sales and prices. The tendency of the supply in a given market to meet the demand at a given price (equation of demand and supply) is due to the adjusting action of competition. The graphical plotting of the changes in the scale of prices due to this process is known as the demand curve. The mutual demand existing between two non-competitive economic groups for each other's profits (reciprocal demand) is brought about in international trade by the tendency of a nation's imports to balance its exports, and determines the reciprocal value of products between non-related groups of the same nation.

5. That which is claimed or demanded; as, the demands of society. 6. Law. (1) An actionable claim of one party against another, whether arising from contract or from a wrongful injury. (2) The act of requesting payment of a claim due, or performance of a service contracted for. 7. [Archaic.] Inquiry; question. Paint.* A half-tint.—dem'i-tol'let, n. Apparel or costume somewhat elaborate altho not quite full dress.—dem'i-tone, n. [Rare.] Mus. A semitone.

dem'i-urge, 1 dem-i-ūrj; 2 dem-i-ūrj, n. 1. In Plato's philosophy, a semi-divine being, the architect or fabricator of the material universe. 2. In Neo-Platonic and Gnostic philosophy, the chief of the lowest order of spirits or eons inhabiting the pleroma. He mingled with chaos and evolved from it the visible world. He was considered to be a subsidiary manifestation of the Supreme Being, and to him was attributed the entry of evil into the world, which was felt to be incompatible with the divine goodness. Some Gnostics held that he brought this about unwillingly, others that he was himself evil and that the action was deliberate.

The power is not that of an absolute cause, but only a world-maker, a demiurge, and this does not answer to the human conception of Deity. [WISCONSIN SCI. AND ART, p. 295. (S. A. R. 1877).]

3. An inferior theistic deity identified by certain Gnostics with the Jehovah of the Jews.
 4. One of a class of public officers or magistrates in several ancient Peloponnesian states. [< L. demurgus, < Gr. demiourgos, < demos, people, + ergon, work.]

dem'i-ur'gic, 1 dem-i-ūr'jik; 2 dem-i-ūr'gic, a. Pertaining to a demiurge or to a world-maker or his work; as, demiurgic days. dem'i-ur'geous; dem'i-ur'gical, adv.

dem'i-vam'brace, n. A piece of plate armor for the outside of the forearm.—dem'i-vill, n. A half-vill, consisting of five freemen or frankpledges.—dem'i-vol, n. Her. A single wing with the feathers turned sinister. See VOL.

dem'i-vol't, 1 dem-i-vōl't; 2 dem-i-vōl't, n. Menépe. One of the seven artificial movements of a horse, consisting of a half-turn with the fore legs raised; also, in fencing, a half turn. [< F. demi-volte, < demi, DEMI-, + volte, VAULT.]

Dem'ne, 1 dem-ä; 2 dem-ä, Hermann C. G. (P. 1766-1772, 1822). A German novelist; pen-name, "Karl Stille".
Dem-nin, 1 de-mn; 2 de-mn, n. A town in Pomerania province, Prussia.

dem-ni'fion, 1 dem-nish-on; 2 dem-nish-on, a. n., or, interj. Euphemistic form of damnation; used especially in the phrase gone or going to the dem-ni-fion bow-wows, that is, gone or going to absolute or everlasting ruin.

de-mo-bil-ize, 1 di-mō-bil-iz or di-mē-bil-iz; 2 de-mō-bil-iz or de-mō-bil-iz, vt. To disband, as mobilized troops; change from a war to a peace footing. [< F. démobiliser; see DE- and MOBILIZE.] de-mo-bil-ize, adv.

De-mo-c'e-dē, 1 de-mōc-ēdē; 2 de-mōc-ēdē, n. A Greek physician of Crotona in the 6th century B. C. who cured Darius and his queen, Atossa. De-mo-kē-des, [Gr.]

de-moc-ra-cy, 1 di-mōk-rä-si; 2 de-mōk-rä-gy, n. [-cies, 1-siz; 2-cis, pl.] 1. The political system in which government is directly exercised or controlled by the people collectively; government by the people, as distinguished from aristocracy.

Jealousy of power honestly gained and justly exercised, envy of attainment or of possession, are characteristics of the mob, not of the people; of a democracy which is false, not of a democracy which is true. False democracy shouts. Every man down to the level of the masses. True democracy is silent. It leads up to the heights of their fullest capacity for service and achievement. The two sides are everlastingly at war. The future of this nation, as the future of the world, is bound up with the hope of a true democracy that builds itself on liberty. [NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER, True and False Democracy, p. 15. (MACE, '07).]

2. A commonwealth in which the people as a whole legislate and choose executive and judicial officers; either (1) directly, as in some of the ancient Greek states in which the sovereign powers were exercised directly in popular assemblies, and many towns in the United States (pure democracy), or (2) through elected representatives, as in every State of the United States (democratic republic).

In a democracy, where the right of making laws resides in the people at large, public virtue, or goodness of intention, is more likely to be found, than either of the other forms of government. [BLACKSTONE, Commentaries intro., § 2, p. 40.]

3. Political and legal equality; a state of society without class distinctions made or favored by law or custom. 4. [D.] The principles of the Democratic party in the United States, or the members collectively of that party. 5. The mass of the people, especially when regarded as exercising political strength or power.

When a furnished democracy becomes conscious of its power, what will be the end of privileges which are not founded on rights? E. ATKINSON in Century Magazine Dec., 1889, p. 247.

[< F. démocratique, < Gr. dēmokratia, < dēmos, people, + kratos, rule, < kratos, strong.] de-moc-ra-tic; de-moc-ra-ty.

dem'o-crat, 1 dem-o-krat; 2 dem'o-crat, n. 1. One who favors a government controlled by the people, or one who believes in political and legal equality; as, the organizers of the French Revolution called themselves democrats. 2. [D.] A member of the Democratic party in the United States. 3. [Local, U. S.] A high light wagon with several seats and without a top.

—Constitutional Democrat. In Russia, a member of a political party formed in 1905 by coalition of exiles in Paris and a Russian body that favored a federal constitution and autonomous Poland.—Gold Democrat (U. S. Polit. Hist.), a Democrat who advocates the gold standard; esp. one who nominated an independent Presidential ticket in 1896.

dem'o-crat'ic, 1 dem'o-krat'ik; 2 dem'o-crat'ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to democracy or a democracy; characterized by or devoted to the principle of popular government; as, a democratic republic.

The true source of power is the people. The Democrats are not democratic enough. [WESTER in Private Correspondence, Letter of Dec. 4, 1823 in vol. i, p. 331. (L. n. & co. 1857).]

2. [D.] Pertaining to or characteristic of the Democratic party in the United States; as, a Democratic victory; a Democratic measure. 3. Characterized by the principle of legal equality; tending to level distinctions of rank and privilege; as, a democratic spirit; democratic ways. [< Gr. demokráticos, < dēmokratia; see DEMOCRACY.]

—Democratic party, one of the two greater political parties in the United States. The old Republican or Anti-Federalist party abandoned that name and assumed that of Democratic, in 1828, as "a novel, distinct, and popular name." This was the birth-time of the present Democratic party. This party has always advocated a rigid adherence to the principles of the Constitution and the equality and autonomy of the States, while opposing the centralization of power in the Federal government. It has stood for equal taxation and a low tariff for revenue only as opposed to a high protective tariff. Its platform in 1896 called for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1; those of 1900 and 1904 opposed the retention of the Insular possessions of the United States and formulated the doctrine of anti-imperialism; that of 1908 declared in favor of a downward tariff reform with a largely extended free list, of the enforcement of the criminal law against guilty trust magnates and the limitation of the powers of private monopolies, of a tax upon individual and corporate incomes, of congressional control of interstate commerce, of the right of labor to organize, and of conservation of the national resources, and again condemned imperialism. This party has carried four presidential elections since the Civil War, those of 1884, 1892, 1912 and 1917, in which Grover Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson were the standard-bearers of the party.—D.-Republican party, the name assumed by the Anti-Federalist party after the Constitution of the United States became popular in 1787, when they perceived the inappropriateness of their party name.

—dem'o-cra'tian, a. & n.—dem'o-cra'tic, a. n. A democrat.—dem'o-cra'tic'i-a-blē, a. n. [Rare.] Capable of being made democratic.—dem'o-cra-tism, n. [Rare.] Democratic spirit or theory.—de-moc-ra-tist, n. [Rare.] One who believes in democracy.—de-moc-ra-tize or -tise, vt. To render democratic; cause to become popular; bring to or within reach or control of the people; level class distinctions; as, to democratize society or art.—de-moc-

Dem'o-ri-tē-an, 1 di-mēk-rī-tē-an; 2 de-mōc-rī-tē-an, a. Relating to Democritus (460 B. C.), the so-called laughing philosopher, and to the atomic philosophy founded by him and Leucippus; in the style of Democritus. See ATOMIC. Dem'o-cri'tic; Dem'o-cri'tic-al.

Dem'o-cri-tus, 1 di-mēk-rī-tūs; 2 de-mōc-rī-tūs, n. A Greek philosopher (400?-357? B. C.), nicknamed "the laughing" because of his good-humored satire; he advanced a theory of the formation of the universe by atoms in motion, which was later developed by Epicurus and Lucretius. De-mō-kri-tōst, [Gr.]

Dem'o-ri-tus Ju'nior. The pen-name of Robert Burton. Dem'o-dex, 1 dem-o-dēks; 2 dem'o-dēks, n. Arach. 1. A genus typical of Demodectidae. 2. [d.] An acaridian of this genus; an itch-insect. [Gr. demos, people, + dēz, worm in wood, < dakno, bite.]—dem'o-dec'ic, a.—demodec'ic mite (Demodex folliculorum).

Dem'o-dic'it, 1 dem'o-dis-it; 2 dem'o-dic'it, n. pl. Arach. A family of acaridians with a vermiform body and setular proboscis; itch-insects.—de-mo'di-cid, a. & n.—de-mo'di-cold, a.

De-mo'do-cus, 1 di-mōd-o-kus; 2 de-mōd-o-cūs, n. 1. In Homer's Odyssey, a bard who sang to Ulysses and his companions at the court of Alcinoüs. 2. In Vergil's Æneid, a companion of Æneas in the Trojan campaign.

de-mo-gen'ic, 1 di-mō-jen'ik; 2 de-mō-jen'ic, a. Sociol. Producing or favoring the development of civic aggregations of population or their interests. [< Gr. demos, people, + gen-].—demogenic sociology, that branch of sociology dealing with peoples who have passed from tribal to civic conditions.

Dem'o-gor'gon, 1 dem'o-ōr di-mō-gōr'gon; 2 dem'o-ōr di-mō-gōr'gon, n. The genius of the soil or earth, fabled to be the life and sustenance of plants; depicted as an old man with a beard, with a cornucopia in his underground, and regarded by later classical and medieval writers as a mysterious and dreaded infernal deity or magician.

Demogor'gon, a tremendous gloom. [SHELLEY Prometheus Unbound act i. (LL., < Gr. daimōn, demon, + gor'gon, terrible.)]

de-mold, 1 di-moid; 2 de-moid, a. Paleon. Plentiful in or characteristic of a given geological formation or period; said of fossil animals or plants. [< Gr. de-mos, district, + -oid.]

dem'ol-selle, 1 dem-wa-zel; 2 dem-wā-sel, n. [F.] 1. An unmarried woman. See DANSEL. 2. An Old World crane, the Numidian crane (Anthropoides virgo) with long white ear-tufts; named from its graceful form and carriage.

3. A pomacentroid fish. 4. The tiger-shark (Galeocerdo tigrinus). 5. A dragon-fly, especially an agrionid.

Demolselle Crane.

dem'o-ja'ter, 1 dem'o-lä'ter; 2 dem'o-lä'ter, n. A worshiper of the people. [< Gr. demos, people, + la-treia, service.]

de-mol'ish, 1 di-mol'ish; 2 de-mōl'ish, vt. 1. To destroy by tearing or throwing down, as a building, wall, or the like; separate the fabric or ruin the structure of; raze; dismantle. 2. To bring to naught; destroy in general; annihilate; ruin. [< F. démolir, < L. demolitor, < de, down, + molitor, work, < mole, mass.]

Syn.: destroy, overthrow, overturn, raze, ruin. A building, monument, or other structure is demolished when reduced to a shapeless mass; it is razed when leveled with the ground; it is destroyed when its structural unity is gone, whether or not its component parts remain. An edifice is destroyed by fire or earthquake; it is demolished by bombardment; it is ruined when, by violence or neglect, it has become unfit for human habitation. See BREAK. Compare ABOLISH.—Ant.: construct, create, make, repair, restore.

The utter demolition of anthropomorphism would be the demolition of the human mind. [F. EXLEY, Idea of God, p. 11. (L. n. & co. 1891).]

2. F. Law. Annulment. 3. n. pl. The remains of a building that has been demolished; ruins. [< F. démolition, < L. demolitione]; < demolitor; see DEMOLISH.]

dem'o-l'ish-on-ist, 1 dem'o-lish-on-ist; 2 dem'o-lish-on-ist, n. One who demolishes or favors demolition, especially of political institutions.

CARLYLE French Revolution vol. i, bk. x, ch. 5, p. 410. (L. n.)

de'mon, 1 di-man; 2 de'mon, n. 1. An evil spirit; devil.

The wrong translation in the New Testament of daimōn, as devil, has given currency to this meaning. Strictly speaking, there is but one devil (diabolos) mentioned in the New Testament, the supreme spirit of evil; demons are subordinate and inferior.

2. Figuratively, a superlatively wicked or cruel person; a monster of depravity. 3. Gr. Myth. (1) A being holding rank midway between gods and man; a supernatural intelligence.

They [the ancient heathen] had some conception of a superior order of beings, between men and God, whom the Greeks generally termed Dæmons (knowing ones) and the Romans Genii. [J. WESLEY Sermons vol. i, p. 235. (S. & A. 1818).]

(2) A guardian spirit; genius; sometimes, a soul which has parted from the body. In later times each person was supposed to be attended by two demons, one good and the other evil.

Though later writers speak of this as the demon or genius of Soliman, he himself does not personify it, but treats it merely as a "divine sign, a prophetic or supernatural voice."

GOETHE Greene vol. viii, pt. ii, p. 409. (L. n. 1864.)

[< L. dæmon, < Gr. daimōn (daimōn), god, ghost, evil spirit.] de'mon; dal'mōn.—Demon of Geneva, in Rabelais's Pantagruel, a nickname of Calvin the Reformer.—demon star, see ALGOL.—Maxwell's d., an intelligent being small enough to recognize and sort out molecules; imagined by Clark Maxwell to show that the second law of thermodynamics is rather an expression of human limitation than of the inherent nature of things.—de'mon-ess, n. A female demon.—de-mo'nial, a. [Rare.] Belonging to, having the characteristics of, or possessed by a demon.—de-mo'nial-an, a. Pertaining to or of the nature of a demon.—de-mo'nial-ism, n. [Rare.] The condition of being a demoniac, or of being possessed by a demon. de-mo'nial-asm, de-mo'nial-ist, n. One that is reputed to have intercourse with the devil or with demons.

Other countries pursued similar courses, our own country demonetizing silver, that is, stopping the coinage of silver, making it only a subsidiary coin instead of a full legal tender, as it had been. [R. T. DEWEY Intro. to Pol. Econ., p. 102. (CHAUR, 1889).]

de-mo-ni-ac, 1 di-mō-ni-ak; 2 de-mō-ni-ak; 2 de-mo'n-i'ac, 1 di-mō-ni-ak; 2 de-mō-ni-ak (XIII), n. 1. Of, like, or befitting a demon or evil spirit; devilish; as, demoniacal laughter. 2. Influenced or produced by or as by demons; frantic; insane; as, demoniac frenzy. 3. Of or like a demon or superior intelligence; more than human; supernatural.

Slow are the beginnings of philosophy. He has something demoniacal in him, who can discern a law or couple two facts. [THOMAS AQUINAS, Summa Theologiae p. 71. (L. n. 1863).]

de-mo-ni-ally, adv. 1. One possessed of a demon; a lunatic, as formerly supposed to be so possessed; also, one possessed of superior or supernatural intelligence.

Do I then question the extraordinary power of Lucretius? On the contrary, I admire him as the first of demoniacs. [DE QUINCEY Essays on the Poets, p. 80. (L. n. 1850).]

2. [D.] One of an Anabaptist sect who maintained that devils will ultimately be saved.—de-mo-ni-a-cism, n. The condition or characteristics of a demoniac; acts of a demoniac.

de-mon'ic, 1 di-mōn'ik; 2 de-mōn'ic, a. 1. Of or like a demon; demoniac. 2. Possessing a subtle moral or intellectual power over others; fascinating as if by supernatural influence; usually fascinating.

There is, by the way, nothing more remarkably illustrative of Goethe's "demoniac" influence than Carlyle's worship of him. [HUTTON Essays, Goethe in vol. ii, p. 8. (MACE, 1880).]

[< OF. departure, < départir; see DEPART.] Syn.: see DEATH.—a new departure, a new course or method of procedure; a change of plan.—to take a d., to make an tion; hence, to remove or degrade in general; as, to depose a king.

He was deposed, He, who had reigned so long and gloriously.

ROBERTS Italy pt. i, div. xvi, et. 16.

2. To bear witness to; state on oath.

The oath administered to the witness is not only that what he deposes shall be true, but that he shall also depose the whole truth.

BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. iii, ch. 23, p. 372.

3. [Rare.] To take the deposition of; examine on oath.

4. [Archaic.] To deposit. 5†. To lay aside; evict.

II. 1. To give testimony; specif., to give testimony under oath; make an affidavit or deposition.

In general... a witness must depose to such facts only as are within his own knowledge. GREENLEAF Evidence, vol. i, pt. iii, ch. 3, p. 571. (L. & C., 1857.)

de-pos'it, 1 di-poz'it; 2 de-pôz'it, r. I. 1. To place on or in some place or receptacle; lay down; also, to cause to lie, settle, or adhere chemically or electrically; precipitate; as, the burden was deposited, the freshly deposited slime; silver is deposited by a battery. 2. To place for safe-keeping; give in trust; as, to deposit goods; to deposit money in a bank. 3†. To lay aside; put away.

II. 1. To settle; be formed by deposition. I < OF. depositer, < LL. deposito, < L. depono; see DEPONE.

de-pos'it-ing, r. A caisson for lifting a vessel from the water and placing it on a stage or dry dock—d. machine, n. Candy-making. An apparatus for molding creams, gums, or other conserves.

de-pos'it, n. 1. That which is or has been laid down or dropped or caused to adhere; specif., matter settling or settled, as by precipitation; as, a deposit of clay; an electrolytic deposit of silver. 2. The act of placing, the amount placed, or the state of being placed, for safe-keeping or profit, as in a bank; anything given as a security or pledge; as, he made a deposit to-day; a deposit of fifty dollars; ten dollars on deposit.

A bank of deposit lends capital which it collects from the community in small parcels, sometimes without paying any interest, and, if it does pay interest, it only pays more than it receives.

MILL Political Economy bk. iii, ch. 10, p. 443. (L. 1888.)

3. Law. (1) A bailment where one entrusts goods to another to be kept without reward, and to be returned on demand. (2) The property so entrusted. 4. BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. iv, ch. 14, p. 199.

5. Thought, purpose, or intention, as revealed in the visible correlation of parts, in the adaptation of means to an end; specif., the purpose of the Creator as shown by such adaptation in nature. 6. Musical. The melodic pattern, plan, or form of a composition. de-sig'n'ment, n.

SYN.: aim, device, end, final cause, intent, intention, object, plan, project, purpose, scheme. Design refers to the adaptation of means to an end, the correspondence and coordination of parts, or of separate acts, to produce a result; intent and purpose overlap all particulars, and fasten on the end itself. Intention is simply the more formal and philosophical term for intent. Design relates to details of form, structure, and action; in themselves; design considers these same details all as means to an end. The plan of a campaign may be for a series of sharp attacks, with the design of thus surprising and overpowering the enemy. A man comes to a fixed intention to kill his enemy; he forms a plan to entrap him into his power, with the design of then compassing his death; as the law can not read the heart, it can only infer the intent from the evidences of design. Intent denotes a straining, stretching forth toward an object; purpose simply the placing it before oneself; hence, we speak of the purpose rather than the intent or intention of God. We hold that the marks of design in nature prove it the work of a great Designer. Intention contemplates the possibility of failure; purpose looks to assured success; intent implies intention, and thus the state of mind of the actor; purpose to the result of the action. Compare AIM; CAUSE; DETERMINATION; IDEA; MODEL; PROJECT. Prep.: the design of defrauding; the design of a building; a design for a statue.—arts of design, such arts as architecture, engraving, and the like, of which design forms an important part.—de-sig'n-a'p'per, n. A paper ruled in squares, used for scale drawings and various other designs.—school of design, a school in which the teaching may range from the simplest invention and drawing of figures to the highest fine art.

der'tro-, 1 der'tro-; 2 der'tro-. Derived from Latin dexter, right; a combining form. In chemistry dextro- denotes a dextrorotatory quality or a derivation from a dextro-compound. der'tro-cam'phene, n. Chem. A crystalline camphene obtained by saturating spirits of turpentine with hydrochloric acid and heating the mixture with alcoholic potash. Its melting-point is 51°-52° C. der'tro-car'di-a, n. Dextrocardia. der'tro-car'di-al, a. der'tro-cere-bral, a. Psychol. Having the right cerebral hemisphere more active than the left; right-brained; the opposite of the normal condition with most persons. der'tro-com'pound, n. Chem. A compound capable of rotating the plane of polarization of light to the right. der'tro-duc'tion, n. A turning (of the eyes) toward the right. der'tro-glu'cose, n. Dextrose. der'tro-gy'ral, a. Having dextrogyrate power. der'tro-gy'rate, a. Crystall. Causing the plane of polarization of radiant energy, as light or radiant heat, to rotate to the right, that is, clockwise, the light being propagated from the observer. der'tro-gy'rous; der'tro-ro'ta-ry, ro'ta-to-ry; der'tro-gy'rous, a. Circling toward the right. der'tro-lac'tic, a. Chem. Pertaining to the dextrorotatory form of lactic acid. der'tro-man'u-al, a. Accustomed to use the right hand; also, done with the right hand. der'tro-man'u-al-ty, n. der'tro-nic, a. Of, pertaining to, or obtained from dextrose. dextronic acid, gluconic acid. See GLUCONIC. der'tro-pl'e-ne, n. Chem. A dextrorotary terpene (C<sub>10</sub>H<sub>16</sub>). der'tro-ro'ta'tion, n. Optics. Rotation from left to right, like the hands of a clock; dextrorotatory motion. der'tro-ro'ta-to-ry, a. Same as dextro-rotary.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.
der'trose, 1 der'tros; 2 der'tros, a. Rising toward the right; opposed to sinistrose; said of such a twining plant as the morning-glory.

This definition, as understood by later botanists (Hooker, Gray, Darwin, etc.), supposes the observer to regard the portion of the coil on the side next to himself, and to characterize it by its relation to his own right and left hands. The older botanists (Linnaeus, the De Candelles, etc.) took the axis of the plant as the point of view, and in consequence exactly reversed the meaning of dextrose and its opposite sinistrose. [L. dextrorsum, contr. of dextroorsum, < dexter, right, + verso, turned.] der'tro-sal.

der'tro-sa-zone, 1 der'tros-a-zōn; 2 der'tros-a-zōn, n. Organic Chem. The osazone of grape-sugar. See OSAZONE.
der'trose, 1 der'tros; 2 der'tros, n. Chem. A sugar found largely in the vegetable kingdom and in honey, also in the animal organism, as in the blood, liver, urine, etc. It is the principal member of the glucose group, and is much less sweet than cane-sugar. It is made commercially by treating starch with sulfuric acid, in which case the resulting solid product is called grape-sugar, and the sirup glucose. Compare GLUCOSE.

der'tro-sin'i-s'al, a. Anat. Extending both in right and left directions; as, the dextrorotational branches of a nerve. der'tro-su'i-a, n. Glycosuria. der'tro-tar'tar'ic, a. See TARTARIC ACID. der'tro-tro'pous, a. Turning to the right; dextrotropic. der'tro-tro'pic.

der'tro-ver'shon, 1 der'tro-vēr'shon; 2 der'tro-vēr'shon, n. Dextroductio.

dey, 1 de; 2 de, n. 1. A Turkish governor of Algiers (before the French conquest of 1830). 2. The chief of the janizaries. 3. Sometimes, a ruler of Tunis or Tripoli. [F. < Turk. dai, uncle; used by the janizaries as the title of elderly men.]

di-a-no'dal, 1 dai-a-no'dal; 2 di-a-no'dal, a. Math. Passing through nodes: said of a sextic surface determined by seven points arbitrarily assumed as nodes on a quartic surface.

di-a-no-e'tic, 1 dai-a-no-e'tic; 2 di-a-no-e'tic, a. Logic. Of or pertaining to the rational or disjunctive faculty or its products or acts; intellectual; discursive. [< Gr. dianoeitikos, < dia, through, + noos, mind.]

di-a-no-e'tic, n. Logic. 1. Logic as treating of reasoning. 2. The branch of stoichiology that treats of the general laws of conception, judgment, and reasoning: so used by Sir Wm. Hamilton.

di-a-nol'al-o-gy, 1 dai-a-nol'al-o-j; 2 di-a-nol'al-o-gy, n. That branch of philosophy which treats of the dianoetic faculties (Sir Wm. Hamilton). [< Gr. dianolia, thought (< dia, through, + noos, mind), + -logia.] di-a-nol'al-cal, a. — di-a-nome, 1 dai-a-nom; 2 di-a-nom, n. Math. A quartic surface having seven arbitrary points taken as nodes and an eighth node, which is any point whatever on the dianodal surface of the others. [< dianomē, distribution.] di-an'thine, 1 dai-an'thin or -thin; 2 di-an'thin or -thin, n. A dye. Saint Denis red. [< DIANTHUS.]

Di-an'thus, 1 dai-an'thus; 2 di-an'thus, n. Bot. A large genus of ornamental herbs of the pink family — the pinks — with narrow grass-like leaves and fragrant flowers. 2. corolla is a grass-like pink or carnation: D. barbatus, the sweet-william or bunch-pink. [< Gr. dios, divine, + anthos, flower.]

di-a-pa'son, 1 dai-a-pē'son or -zan; 2 di-a-pā'son or -gon, n. 1. Mus. (1) The basal melodic tone of a pipe-organ; or the stop producing it.

In the open diapason the pipes are of metal and open at the top. Of these there are the double open diapason, which sounds the octave below the tone corresponding to the key depressed; the principal, or octave, which gives tones an octave above; and the fifteenth, giving tones two octaves above. In the stopped diapason the pipes are of wood and closed at the top. In this series there are the bourdon, the tones of which are the octave below those corresponding to the keys depressed; the flute, the octave above; and the piccolo, two octaves above. See STOP, n. (2) A tuning-fork, or the standard pitch given by a tuning-fork. (3) In old Greek music, an octave. 2. Hence, figuratively: (1) Comprehensive or fundamental harmony; universal concord. The diapason of human thought was never struck till Christian culture summoned woman into the republic of letters. WENDELL PHILLIPS Orations, Idols p. 245. (L. & S. 1882.) (2) Correct pitch; accord. (3) The complete range of tones.

LONGFELLOW Arsenal at Springfield st. 8.

di'a-pause, 1 dai-a-pēz; 2 di'a-pas, n. Embryol. The state of repose occurring between two blastokinetic motions in insect embryos.

di'a-ped, 1 dai-a-pēd; 2 di'a-pēd, n. Math. The line of meeting of two planes of a polyhedron that do not touch each other. [< dia- + Gr. pēdō, leap.] di'a-pe-de'sis, 1 dai-a-pi-dē'sis; 2 di'a-pe-dē'sis, n. Physiol. The migration of white blood-corpuscles or wandering cells from the blood-vessels into the surrounding connective tissues, occurring to some extent normally, but much increased in inflammation. Compare LEUCOCYTE. [< Gr. diapēdesis, < dia, through, + pēdō, leap.] — di'a-pe-de'tic, a. Of or pertaining to diapēdesis.

Di-a-pen'si-a, 1 dai-a-pen'si-a; 2 di'a-pēn'si-a, n. Bot. A genus of low evergreen shrubs of the family Diapentaceae, with small narrow leaves, and small white or purplish flowers. The only known species are D. lapponica of northern Europe and America and alpine specimens in the United States, and D. himalaica of the Himalayas. [< Gr. dia pēn'te, by fives.]

Di'a-pen'si-a-ce-a, 1 dai-a-pen'si-a; 2 di'a-pēn'si-a-ce-a, n. pl. Bot. A small family of low perennial herbs and shrubs of the order Ericales, with alternate simple leaves and regular pentamerous flowers, except the trimerous pistil. [< Gr. dia, by, + pēn'te, five.]

di'a-pen'te, 1 dai-a-pen'te; 2 di'a-pēn'te, n. 1. Anc. Mus. A perfect fifth. 2. Anc. Pharm. A composition having five ingredients. [L., < Gr. diapente, < dia, by, + pēn'te, five.]

di'a-per, 1 dai-a-pēr; 2 di'a-per, v. I. t. 1. To ornament with a variety of patterns or figures; hence, to decorate with the same figure or similar figures often repeated; as, to diaper a cloth of gold; the field was diapered with daisies. 2. To use or work in diaper; as, to diaper a flower on silk. 3. To put a diaper on. II. t. To ornament anything, as cloth, with figures. [< F. diaper, < OF. diapre; see DIAPER, n.] di'a-per, n. 1. A fine figured silken or linen cloth woven with ornamental devices, geometric patterns, scroll-work or latticework, or leaf and flower designs; hence, something that decorates or ornaments, as if with figures or patterns. Compare DAMASK. 2. A surface-decoration consisting of a system of reticulations each of which contains an ornamental unit, as a flower or a leaf.

The small temple . . . has all the features of a very old temple — great simplicity of outline . . . and the whole surface of the upper part covered with that peculiar horse-hoof diaper which was so fashionable in the early days. JAS. FAIRBANKS Hist. Ind. and Arch. vol. i, bk. iv, ch. 2, p. 315, l. 6. n. c. 1891.

3. A single-colored silk fabric with a woven pattern; also, a single-colored goods, particularly linen, with a not very noticeable pattern made only by the direction or relief of the threads; table-linen. 4. A square of soft fabric worn as a breechcloth by infants; clout. 5. Her. A surface-pattern that imparts a decorative character without assuming the distinctive attributes of a charge.

6. A cloth used as a towel. [< OF. diapre, < L. iaspis; see IASPER.] di'a-pront; di'e-per.*

di'a-per-ing, 1 dai-a-pēr-ing; 2 di'a-per-ing, n. 1. Act or process of making diaper designs. 2. (1) A diaper pattern. (2) A fabric ornamented with diaper patterns.

3. Arch. See DIAPER, n. 2. 4. Her. See DIAPER, n. 5.

di'a-phane, 1 dai-a-fēn; 2 di'a-fān, n. 1. A diaphanous figured silk fabric. 2. The transparent investing membrane of a cell or sac. 3. A sheet of paper or cardboard specially treated so that it has become translucent, and printed with a design in colors so that when the sheet is held up to the light the effect is like that of stained glass.

4. The electric light of a diaphanoscope. [< Gr. diaphanēs, transparent, < dia, through, + phainō, show.] — di'a-phane'dt, a. Transparent. — di'a-phane'ty, n. Transparency. — di-aph'a-ny; di'a-phane'ty, n. — di-aph'a-nle, n. The art of imitating stained glass by affixing transparent pictures to plain glass. — di'a-phane'o-graph, n. 1. An instrument by means of which the reflection of an object upon a sheet of glass is used as a guide to facilitate drawing. 2. A photograph printed on glass, resembling a monochrome when so hung that light will pass through it. — di'a-phane'o-ter, n. 1. An instrument for estimating the transparency of the atmosphere. 2. An instrument for testing sirups by their comparative transparency. — di'a-phane'o-scope, n. 1. A darkened box for viewing transparent positive photographs. 2. The device used in diaphanoscopy. — di'a-phane'o-type, n. Phot. A picture made by coloring on the back a photograph lightly printed on translucent paper, and then exactly superimposing this on a strongly printed duplicate.*

di'a-phane's-co-py, 1 dai-a-fa-nēs'ko-pi; 2 di'a-fa-nēs'-co-py, n. Med. Examination of body-cavities by the introduction into them of the incandescent electric light. [< dia- + Gr. phanos, light, + skopeō, look.]

di-aph'a-nalt; di'a-phane't-ly, adv. — ness, n.

The mazes of the spider festoon the grass in a drapery of diaphanous silver lace pendant in sparkling spars from clover head grass tip. W. H. GILSON Strolls by Starlight, Midnight Rambles p. 38, ln. 1891.

dieb, 1 dīb; 2 dēb, n. [Afr.] An African jackal (Canis anthus).
die-back, 1 dai'bak; 2 di'bak, n. [Local, U. S.] A disease of trees, especially noticeable in Florida orange groves, killing the tops.

die-bitch, 1 dī'bit; 2 dē'bit, n. Hans Karl Friedrich Anton (1785-1831). Count Sabalkansky, a Russian field-marshal; took Varna, 1828, Silistria and Adrianople, 1829.

die-clan, die-clous, etc. Same as DIECLAN, etc.
die-ec-ta-sis, 1 dai-ek'ta-sis; 2 di-ek'ta-sis, n. Pros. Extension by the insertion of a syllable. [< Gr. diektasis, a stretching.] die-dral, 1 dai'y-dral; 2 di'e-dral, a. Same as DIEDRAL.

Die-fen-bach, 1 di'fēn; 2 dē'fēn-bā, n. Johann Friedrich (1794-1847). A Prussian surgeon; Operative Surgery.

Die-fen-bach 'a, 1 di'fēn-bak'a; 2 dē'fēn-bāc'a, n. Bot. A small genus of tropical American herbs of the arum family grown for the beauty of their foliage. [< Dieffenbach, a German naturalist.]

die-go, 1 di'gō; 2 di'e-gō, n. 1. A Spanish personal name, the equivalent of James. 2. Hence, a Spaniard. Compare DAGO. 3. A heavy sword of Spanish style. 4. A kind of pear.

die-go Sua-rez, 1 di'gō'suā'rez; 2 dē'suā'rez, n. 1. A seaport town in the N. of the island of Madagascar. 2. A bay of the same name on which the town is situated.

dielectric capacity or constant, the capacity for transmitting electrical forces or effects by induction; inductive capacity.—d. hysteresis, in a dielectric subject to electrical stress, the retardation or lag observed in the return to its original condition when such stress is removed, supposed to be due to molecular friction occurring during readjustment. See HYSTERESIS.—d. machine, a machine generating static electricity by friction.—d. polarization, the hypothetical condition of a dielectric whose opposite faces are oppositely electrified: a term proposed by Faraday. The molecules are supposed to arrange themselves in a series of polar chains under electrification somewhat in the same way as soft iron filings act when a magnet-pole is approached to them.—d. resistance, the mechanical resistance offered by a dielectric body to perforation or destruction by the electric discharge.—d. strain, the strain, due to electric stress, to which a dielectric is subjected when its opposite surfaces are electrified.—d. strength, the power of a dielectric to resist stress caused by induction across it, as measured by the difference of potential necessary to break through it by disruptive discharge.—die-ec-tic 'cal, adv.
die-ec-tic 'le, n. Elec. Any substance that transmits electrical forces or effects by induction rather than by conduction; a non-conductor, as glass.

Faraday had good reason, after making the discovery of the induction of electric polarity in non-conducting substances, to try the specific directional qualities of crystals used as dielectrics. Wm. Thomson Math. and Phys. Papers vol. II, p. 268. [u. p. 1884.]

die-el'tra, 1 dai-el'tra; 2 di-el'tra, n. Same as DIELECTRA. [< di- + Gr. elytron, sheath.]

Die-pen-beck, 1 di'pen-bek; 2 dē'pen-bēk, Abraham van (1607-1675). A Dutch historical painter; noted as an imitator of Rubens. Die-pen-beket.

Die-eppe, 1 di'ep; 2 di'ep, n. A seaport in Seine-Inférieure department, France.—Dieppe lace, or Dieppe point, a local kind of pillow-lace.

die-er-sil'i-a, 1 dai'er-sil'i-a; 2 di'er-sil'i-a, n. Bot. Same as CARCELEA. [< Gr. diaterō, divide, + siliqua, pod.]

die-er-sis, 1 dai'er-sis; 2 di'er-sis, adv. [SES, di'er-sis, 1-sis; 2-sis, pl.] 1. Two dots (") placed over the second of two adjacent vowels that are to be pronounced separately, as in recho, zoblogy, the Latin aurei, or French haïr; not used in the text of this dictionary.

2. The separation of syllables by these dots, or of two adjacent vowels that would regularly form a diphthong; opposed to syneresis. 3. Pros. The coincidence of the end of a metrical foot with the end of a word in a verse; metrical die-sis. See CESURA. 4. Division, as of a cell; any interruption or dissolution of continuity. 5. Pathol. The division or separation of parts normally united, as by a wound or a burn. 6. Surg. The mechanical separation of parts, as by lancing, incision, etc. 7. Crust. The division in the outer branch of the caudal plectopod. [< LL. die-sis, < Gr. diastēsis, division, < dia, asunder, + haireō, take.]—bucolecteris, in the scansion of Greek or Latin dactylic hexameters, a die-sis following the fourth foot of the line; most frequent in pastoral poetry.

die-ret'ic, 1 dai-ret'ic; 2 di'e-ret'ic, I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to dieresis or division. 2. Med. Corroding; escharotic; caustic. II. n. Med. A corrosive or caustic substance; an escharotic. [< Gr. diarectikos, < dia, asunder, + haireō, take.]
Die-ret'ic 'le, 1 dai-ret'ic; 2 di'e-ret'ic, n. Bot. A genus of shrubs of the honeysuckle family with opposite leaves and terminal or axillary flowers. D. japonica is common in cultivation. [< Diereile, who sent it from Canada to our forefathers.]

die-sis, 1 dai'sis; 2 di'es, n. Sing. & pl. [L.] Day; days used only as the phrases following:—die amoris [L.] (Law), literally, day of love; the fourth or appearance day of the term, given by the favor of the court to the defendant for his appearance.—die a quo [L.] (Civ. Law), literally, the day from which; the day commencing any transaction, the initial day.—die atri [L.] (Rom. Antiq.), literally, black days; same as DIES RELIGIOSI.—die cedit [L.] (Civ. Law), literally, the day comes or arrives; a term used to denote the time when a right or legacy becomes vested. Compare DIES VENIT.—die comitatus [L.] (Rom. Law), literally, election days; the 190 days set apart by law on which the people elected their magistrates or held their legislative assemblies. On such days the pretors' courts were closed while the popular assembly was in session.—die communes in banco [L.] (Law), literally, ordinary days in bank; regular days for appearance in court; common return-days.—die datus [L.] (Law), literally, a day given; a time set for the defendant to answer to a continuance of the declaration, which is equivalent to a continuance of the cause.—die datus partibus [L.] (Law), literally, a day given to the parties (of a suit); a continuance or adjournment of a cause.—die datus prece partium [L.] (Law), literally, a day given at the prayer of the parties; a continuance granted at the request of both parties to a suit.—die fasti [L.] (Rom. Law), literally, days of speech; the 40 days, marked F in the calendar, on which the pretors held their courts and on which in general legal and political business could be transacted. The die fasti were sometimes loosely included under this name. Compare DIES NEFASTI.—die inceptus pro complete habetur [L.] (Civ. Law), literally, a day begun is considered as completed; a reference to the fact that the law takes no cognizance of parts of a day, as such.—die interpellat pro hoc die [L.] (Civ. Law), literally, the day demands on behalf of the man; a reference to the fact that in law the day on which an obligation matures virtually constitutes a demand for settlement.—die Iray, Day of Wrath: the name of a famous hymn of the Roman church, so called from its opening words.—die juridicus [L.] (Law), literally, day on which judgment is given; a court-day.—die nefasti [L.] (Rom. Law), literally, days on which speech is prohibited. 1. The 60 days, marked N on the calendar, on which the courts were closed and it was illegal to transact business: so called from the fact that it was unlawful for the pretors to speak the three words do, dico, addico, which prefaced their judicial pronouncements. 2. Days decreed by the Roman Senate to include as mourning the anniversary of a disaster.—die non juridicus [L.] (Law), literally, a day on which judgment is not given; a day on which no court business can be legally transacted. In common law Sundays and such peculiarly sacred days as Christmas day, Good Friday, etc., are die non, but legal holidays, half-holidays, bank holidays, and election days are not so of necessity. In the United States the matter is regulated in the several States by statutes, which detail explicitly the acts that may or may not be performed on such days, ministerial acts being frequently permissible when strictly judicial acts are prohibited. Formerly it was within the discretion of the king's chancellor to have a day of assize, or assizes, and modern practice permits may sit at any time. Sunday included if public policy so demands.—die pacis [L.] (Old Eng. Law), literally, day of peace: a day either of the king's peace or the church's peace, to one of which divisions every day of the year belonged.—die religiosi [L.] (Rom. Antiq.), literally, holy days; anniversaries of great disasters, and the days after the Ides, Kalends, and Nones, on which it was unlawful to carry on business or to keep open the courts. Such days were considered unlucky for the inception of any affair of moment. Compare DIES NEFASTI.—die statim cedit sed non venit [L.] (Law), literally, the day comes at once but does not arrive; a reference to the fact that the fact is under a contract to be performed on a certain future day yet at the moment when such contract is made but can not be enforced at law until that day comes.—die utilis [L.] (Old Law), literally, useful days; days on which an heir was permitted to apply to a judge for an inheritance.—die venit [L.] (Law), literally, the day has arrived; a term denoting the time when the performance of a contract is legally demandable.—die vitiosus [L.] (Rom. Antiq.), literally, faulty days; same as DIES RELIGIOSI.

die-sis, 1 dai'sis; 2 di'es-sis, n. 1. Mus. The difference in tone between a major and a minor semitone, represented by the ratio of vibrations 125:128. 2. Gr. Mus. One of several intervals varying from a semitone to a quarter-tone, used as a tonal unit; specifically, the Pythagorean semitone, equal to the difference between two major tones and a perfect fourth. Compare LIXMA.

3. Print. The double dagger (‡); a reference-mark. [< Gr. diēsis, < dia, through, + hēmi, send.]

die-t, 1 dai't; 2 di't, n. 1. To prescribe a course of food for; regulate his patient. 2. To give food to; as, he strictly dieted his patient. 3. To give food to; feed. II. v. 1. To take food and drink according to a regimen. 2. To take nourishment; eat.

die-t, n. 1. Solid or liquid food taken in regular quantities, or of a particular kind, in course of medical treatment or in accordance with hygienic rules; a regulated order or course of eating and drinking; a prescribed or regulated regimen. 2. The food and drink habitually taken; daily fare; victuals; as, eggs are a nourishing diet. 3. [Archaic.] Allowance of food; ration. 4. Allowance for expenses; daily pay, as of a legislator. [< F. diète, < L. diæta, < Gr. diaita, manner of living, diet.]

die-t, n. 1. Solid or liquid food taken in regular quantities, or of a particular kind, in course of medical treatment or in accordance with hygienic rules; a regulated order or course of eating and drinking; a prescribed or regulated regimen. 2. The food and drink habitually taken; daily fare; victuals; as, eggs are a nourishing diet. 3. [Archaic.] Allowance of food; ration. 4. Allowance for expenses; daily pay, as of a legislator. die't, n. 1. A legislative assembly, holding daily sessions or called on a set day. Specif. [D-] (1) The legislature of any of the federated states of the German or of the Austrian empire; Landtag; as, the Prussian Diet; the Bohemian Diet. (2) The parliament of an independent monarchy of northern Europe; as, the Danish Diet or Rigsdag; the Swedish Diet or Riksdag; the Diet of the former kingdom of Poland. (3) The semi-annual meeting of the estates of the old German or Holy Roman Empire; Reichstag; often distinguished by the name of the city where they sat; as, the Diet of Worms (1521), and the Diet of Speyer (1529), the purposes of which were to check the Reformation and prevent the dissemination of new doctrines, and the Diet of Augsburg (1530), whose purpose was to adjust religious disputes. The Frankfurt assembly, which deliberated in 1848 on the restoration of the empire, and the subsequent assemblies of the German Bund, were called the Diets; but the name is not applied to the Reichstag of the present German empire.

2. [Scot.] A single sitting or session, as of a court, civil or ecclesiastical; also, a day fixed for an event or appearance.

A Christian of course will go to church, at least for one diet of the day. BLACKIE Lay Sermons ser. xii, p. 108. [s. 1881.]

3. [Scot.] Eccel. The discharge of some ministerial function at a fixed time; as, a diet of preaching. 4. The metal scrapings, etc., from gold and silver plate at the British mint; used for assays. 5. An excursion. [< F. diète, same as diète, diet, but influenced in meaning by L. dies, day.] SYN. see CONGRESS.—die't of compearance (Scots Law), the day in which a party is summoned to appear in court. [legislative diet.]

die't-al, 1 dai't-al; 2 di't-al, a. Of or pertaining to a diet.—die't-al 'an, 1 dai't-al'an; 2 di't-al'an, I. a. Dietary. II. n. One who follows a prescribed diet; one who advocates dieting.

die't-ary, 1 dai't-ari; 2 di't-ari, a. Of or pertaining to diet or eating. [< L. diæta; see DIET.]

die't-ic, 1 dai't-ik; 2 di't-ik, -kal; 2 di'e-tic 'ic, -i-cal, die't-ic 'cal, a. Relating to diet or the regulation of diet; belonging to or of the nature of dietetics. [< Gr. diætētikos, < diætē, diet.]—die't-ic 'cal, adv.

die't-ic 'les, 1 dai't-ik's; 2 di'e-tic's, n. The branch of hygiene or medicine that treats of diet and dieting.

die't-ic 'ian, 1 dai't-ic'an; 2 di'e-tic'an, n. An expert in dietetics; also, a physician who applies dietetics to treatment of disease. die't-ic 'clant; die't-ic 'ist.

The main kitchen . . . is constantly supervised by a dietitian who directs the preparation of special diets prepared in a separate kitchen by student nurses. E. MURIEL ANSCOMBE The Jewish Hospital of St. Louis in "Hospital Management" Aug. 1920, p. 2.

die't-ic 'en, 1 dai't-ic'en; 2 di'e-tic'en, n. Chem. The cyclic hydrocarbon C<sub>8</sub>H<sub>8</sub>; a term given to any compound containing two ethylene groups, as NH(CH<sub>2</sub>CH<sub>2</sub>)<sub>2</sub>NH, dithienediamine. [< di- + ETHYL.]

die't-ic 'yl, 1 dai't-ik; 2 di't-ik, n. Chem. I. a. Having two ethyl groups, especially instead of hydrogen. II. n. Butane (C<sub>4</sub>H<sub>10</sub>).

we differed. [L. differo, < dis-, dis-, + fero, carry.] SYN: disagree, dissent, vary. Two or more things differ, one thing differs from another; it carries as compared with itself at another time. Mountains differ in height; the temperature varies from day to day. ANT: see synonyms for agree. PREP: persons, things, opinions differ from each other; persons differ in opinion with one another.

differe, pp. Differed. S. S. differe-ence, 1 dif'er-ens; 2 dif'er-ēnc, vt. [-ENCED; -ENG-ING]. 1. To make different, or mark as different; distinguish; discriminate; as, to difference two writers by their style.

The organism of the anthropoid apes is very little differentiated from ours. Lewes Problems, Psychol. vol. 1, p. 144. [a. co.] 2. Her. To add a mark of difference to; as, to difference a bearing; also performed in a variety of other ways, as by changing the tincture, adding small charges to the field or ordinary augmentation with the main difference, as opposed to cadency (the distinguishing between the arms of blood-relatives), consists in differentiating between similar arms borne by unrelated families or individuals, in the treatment of coats of arms formerly borne by feudatories, and in the granting of honorable additions to possessors of armorial bearings at the present day.

3. Math. To subtract (each of a series of quantities) from that next following.—differe-en-ing, pa. Distinguishing; differentiating.—differe-en-ing-ly, adv.

differe-en-ty, n. 1. The state or quality of being other or unlike, or that in which two things are unlike; dissimilarity in any respect; variation; distinction; unlikeness; as, notice the difference between the two; a distinction without a difference. 2. A disagreement in sentiment, intent, or opinion; a controversy; hence, a quarrel; a difference that can not be reconciled; their differences were many. 3. A separate treatment; discrimination; as, she made no difference between her stepchildren and her own children. 4. Math. (1) The number or quantity by which one number or quantity is greater or less than another; the result obtained by subtracting one number from another. (2) The increment produced in the value of a function by adding unity to the argument; symbolized by Δ. 5. Her. A figure or device introduced into heraldic blazons to distinguish persons bearing the same arms; cadency. The chief marks of difference are the label (eldest son), crescent (second son), mullet (third son), martlet (fourth son), annulet (fifth son), fleur-de-lis (sixth son), rose (seventh son), cross moline (eighth son), double quarterfoil (ninth son), and baton sinister (bastard). See these words.

6. Logic. The specific difference; differentia. 7. Com. A margin that has become payable. Wall street neither buys nor sells... [but] merely pays 'differences' when the day for delivery arrives.

J. H. BROWN Great Metropolis ch. 3, p. 44. [AM. p. co., 1869.] 8. A preference. 9. A part; portion. 10. A variety; division; class. [< F. difference, < L. differentia, < differe-(n)-; see DIFFERENT.] differt [Scott.]; differe-en-ty; differe-en-ty.

SYN: contrariety, disagreement, discrepancy, discrimination, disparity, dissimilarity, dissimilitude, distinction, diversity, inconsistency, inequality, unlikeness, variation, variety. A difference is in the things compared; a discrimination is in our judgment of them; a distinction is in our definition or description or mental image of them. Careful discrimination of real differences results in clear distinctions. Disparity is stronger than inequality, implying that one thing falls far below another; as, the disparity of our achievements when compared with our ideals. Dissimilarity is between things sharply contrasted; there may be a difference between those almost alike. There is a discrepancy in accounts that fail to balance. Variety involves more than two objects; so, in general, does diversity; variation is a difference in the condition or action of the same object at different times. Disagreement is not merely the lack, but the opposite, of agreement; it is a mild word for opposition and conflict; difference is sometimes used in the same sense. See REMAINDER.—ANT: agreement, consonance, harmony, identity, likeness, resemblance, similarity, uniformity, unity.—PREP: difference between the old and the new; differences among men; a difference in character; of action, of style; (less frequently) a difference (controversy) with a person; a difference of one thing from (incorrectly to) another.—COMPLETIVE differe (Logic), same as DIFFERENTIAL.—CONSTITUTIVE differe (Logic), same as DIFFERENTIAL.—CONTRAST differe (Logic), that created by bringing into contact two dissimilar metals or other substances without the intervention of a battery, as zinc and copper, the former of which is positively and the latter negatively electrified by contact.—de (Astron.), same as ASCENSIONAL DIFFERENCE.—differe-en-ty, n. A machine for calculating mathematical tables; a computer (Math.), an equation of finite differences or enlargements (Psychophys.), in the practical application of Weber's law, the hypothesis that equal stimulus ratios correspond to equal sensation differences; opposed to the ratio hypothesis, which holds that they correspond to equal sensation ratios. —d, threshold, n. Psychophys. In the application of Weber's law, a term proposed by Fechner for the ratio of the least discernible difference to the original standard sensation; a constant fraction expressed by the formula

This represents the minimum increment of stimulus sufficient to produce a noticeable difference of sensation at maximal attention, after all possible errors have been eliminated.—d, tone, n. Acoustics. A combination tone resulting from the simultaneous sounding of two simple tones. It is subdivided into (1) first d, tone, composed of the fundamental and an upper partial and having a frequency, f, expressed by the formula  $f = \frac{1}{2} (f_1 + f_2)$ , where  $f_1$  is the frequency of the upper partial and  $f_2$  of the fundamental or lower tone. (2) second d, tone, composed of the first difference-tone and one of its two primaries or one of their upper partials, the formula of whose frequency is  $f = 2f_1 - f_2$ . See acoustic and sonus, under resultant.—divided (Logic), same as DIFFERENTIAL.—differe-en-ty, n. The difference of potential existing between two points in a closed circuit which produces the flow of current.—essen-tial (Logic), same as DIFFERENTIAL.—first d, 1. Math. The result of a single performance of the operation of taking the difference, or increasing the independent variable of a function by unity, symbolized by Δ. From this the second d, the difference between two successive values of a series of first differences; third d, the difference between the second differences; fourth d, etc. 2. Logic. The fundamental difference.—frequency d (Phys.), the difference between two frequencies of vibration expressed as a numerical quantity, as that between the number of complete alternations per second of two electric currents.—individual differences (Zool.), the many slight and often minute but strongly marked differences manifesting themselves in the progeny of the same pair or in individuals of the same species when subjected to precisely similar environmental conditions. Individual difference.—Inverse d (Math.), the sum of all the values of a function for all the discrete values of the independent variable less than the actual value. [C].—method of d, see INDUCTIVE METHOD, under INDUCTIVE.—method of just-discernible, least, or minimal differences (Psychophys.), one of the four accepted methods of sensation-measurements. It consists in taking a standard sensation and adding to it little by little until the addition is perceptible, and then subtracting from the total sensation thus obtained until the effect of the subtraction is felt. Half the sum of these two differences is the just-discernible difference. Its formula is  $\frac{d+d'}{2}$ . Compare DIFFERENCE-THRESHOLD.—mixed differences (Math.), those partly finite and partly infinitesimal.—partial d (Math.), the increment to a function of two variables due to increasing one of them by unity.—phase d (Elec.), the difference between the times of the asynchronous maxima or zero values of two alternating magnitudes, such as current or electromotive force; expressed as an angular value or as the fraction of a period.—potential d, 1. Elec. (1) The difference between absolute potentials of two given points in space. (2) The work required to move a unit of electricity in one direction between such points against electric repulsion. (3) The energy accumulated by moving this unit in the reverse direction. 2. Sociology. The adaptability evidenced by a social population, as in its capacity for assimilating diverse civilizations and cultures.—singular d (Zool.), same as INDIVIDUAL DIFFERENCE.—specific d, same as DIFFERENTIAL.—taking the d (Math.), see FIRST DIFFERENCE.—to split the d, to compromise by means of equal mutual concessions; to meet each other halfway.

differe-en-ty, 1 dif'er-ent; 2 dif'er-ēnt, a. 1. Not the same; non-identical; distinct; other; as, a different clerk is there now. Different occupations employ different muscles.

MILL Polytechnic Economy p. 105. [A. 1888.] 2. Marked by a difference; not having like nature; dissimilar; unlike; as, their dispositions are different. They are at once above us and below us, but always different from us, both in our good points and our bad.

M. C. C. Chas. A. C. ch. 13, p. 272. [u.] [< F. different, < L. different-(n)-, ppr. of differe; see DIFFER.] SYN: contrary, discordant, dissimilar, dissident, distinct, diverse, separate, several, unlike, various, varying. Differe is opposed to like or similar, distinct to identical, separate to united. Two objects that are exactly alike can not in the strictest sense be said to be different, but they are distinct. In popular usage, however, the two words are frequently interchanged. See CONTRARY.—ANT: see synonyms for ALIKE.—PREP: from (different to) is an English colloquialism.—differe-en-ty, adv.—differe-en-ty, n.

differe-en-ty, 1 dif'er-en-shi-a; 2 dif'er-en-shi-a, n. [< L. differe, < dis-, < fero, carry.] Logic. Any essential characteristic of a species by reason of which it differs from other species of the same genus; specific difference; thus, a sword is generically a weapon of war, but has for its differentia the character of being a blade fitted for cutting and thrusting. di-gress'iv, 1 dai-dri-'siv; 2 di-gwán'd. n. Chem. A derivative of guanidine ( $C_2H_5N_3$ ). di-guan'idet.

Digue't, n. A dike; bank.

di-gyut, 1 dai'jin; 2 di'gyén, n. Bot. A plant of the obsolete Linnean order Dygania.

Di-gyn'-at, 1 dai-jin'-a; 2 di-kýn'-a, n. pl. Bot. An order (now obsolete) in the Linnean artificial system of plants, characterized by the flowers having two pistils. [< DI- + Gr. gyné, woman.] — di-gý-nous, a. Bot. Having two pistils, or flowers with two pistils. di-gyn'-ant.

di-hal'o-gen, 1 dai-hal'o-jen; 2 di-hál'o-gén, a. Chem. Containing two halogen atoms.

di-he'dral, 1 dai-hí-drál; 2 di-hé'dral, a. 1. Two-sided; formed by or having two plane faces; as a dihedral angle, or the dihedral biplane, as the first reshaped Santos among flying-machines. 2. Math. Denoting a group of obstructions, either 2n nonhomogeneous or 4n homogeneous, which correspond to the rotations that make a figure, which exists on the equator between two hemispheres and consists of two n-sided regular polygons which are co-incident, coincide with itself without being identical.

di-he'dron, 1 dai-hí-drón; 2 di-hé'drón, n. A figure with two sides or surfaces. [< DI- + Gr. hedra, seat, < hezomai, sit.]

di-he'lli-um, 1 dai-hí'l'i-um; 2 di-hé'lli-úm, n. Astron. The parameter of an elliptic orbit which passes through the sun. [< DI- + Gr. hêlios, sun.] di-hé'lli-ost; di-he'y-lý.

di-hex-ag-o-nal, 1 dai-hèks-a'-o-nól; 2 di'hèks-ág'-o-nal, a. Twelve-sided in cross-section, as a simple form of the hexagonal system; also, consisting of two hexagonal parts united.

Di-hóng', 1 dai-dóng'; 2 di-hóng', n. A branch of the Brahmaputra river, India.

di-hý-dra-zone, 1 dai-hái-dra-zón; 2 di-hý'-dra-zón, n. Chem. A hydrazine in which the oxygen of two carbonyl groups has been replaced.

di-hý-dric, 1 dai-hái-drnk; 2 di-hý'-dric, a. Chem. 1. Having two hydroxyl groups. 2. [Rare.] Having two acid hydrogen atoms.

di-hý-drí-o-did, 1 dai-hái-drí-o-díd; 2 di-hý'-drí-o-díd, n. Chem. A compound containing the elements of two hydrie acid molecules. didi-hý-drite, 1 dai-hái-drait; 2 di-hý'-drit, n. Mineral. A green hydrous copper phosphate ( $H_2CuP_2O_7 \cdot 4H_2O$ ) crystallizing in the monoclinic or triclinic system. [< DI- + Gr. hydr (hydr-, water).]

di-hý-dro-, 1 dai-hái-dró; 2 di-hý'-dro-. Designating a combination with two hydrogen atoms; a combining form. di-hý'-dr-.

di-hý-dro-bre'm'id, 1 dai-hái-dro-bré'm'id; 2 di-hý'-dro-bre'm'id, n. Chem. A compound containing the elements of two hydrobromic acid molecules. di-hý'-dro-bre'm'idet.

di-hý-dro-chlo'ríd, 1 dai-hái-dro-cló'ríd; 2 di-hý'-dro-chló'ríd, n. Chem. A compound containing the elements of two hydrochloric acid molecules. di-hý'-dro-chlo'ríd-et.

'Hy-drox'-y, 1 dai'hál-droks'-y; 2 di'hý'-droks'-y. Same as DIOXY-, a combining form and adjective. — dihydroxy acid (Chem.), an acid, as tartaric, that contains two hydroxyl groups which are not carboxyl group constituents.

di-hý-dró-yá-di-há-loks'-it, 2 di'hý'-drók's-yt, a. Chem. Containing two hydroxyl groups as glycolic acid.

'Hy-drox'-y-tár-tar'íc, 1 dai'hál-droks'-tar-tar'ík; 2 di'hý'-drók's-y-tár-tar'íc, a. Chem. Designating the colorless, crystalline, tetrahydroxy acid,  $[C(OH)(COOH)_2]$ , resulting from the oxidation of dihydroxyacetic acid.

'I'-am-bú-, 1 dai-oi-am'b-, -am'bús; 2 di't'-ám-b-, 'I'-am'bús, j. am'bús, n. [-AMBS or -AMB-, 1 -ambz or -amb'ai; 2 -ámbs or -ám-bái, pl.] Anc. Pros. A double iambus, or iamby dipody used as a compound foot, forming a meter in iambic verse (— — —). [< LL. diambus, < Gr. diambos, < di-, DI- + iambos, IAMBUS.]

I'-o-díd, 1 dai-oi'-díd; 2 di-t'-o-díd, n. Chem. A compound having two atoms of iodine with an element or radical. I'-o-díd-et.

I'-o-do-car-bar-zól, 1 dai-oi'-do-kúr-ba-zól-or-zól; 2 di't'-o-do-kúr-ba-zól-or-zól, n. Chem. A yellow, odorless, crystalline antiseptic ( $C_{12}H_{10}NI$ ) formed by the action of iodine on carbazole.

I'-o-do-fór-m, 1 dai-oi'-fo-dó-fórm; 2 di't'-o-do-fórm, n. Chem. A yellow, crystalline antiseptic ( $C_{12}H_{10}OI$ ) formed by the action of iodine on acetylindole.

I'-o-do-sál-vól, 1 dai-oi'-do-sál-or-sól; 2 di't'-o-do-sál-vól-or-sól, n. Chem. A colorless, tasteless, crystalline antiseptic ( $HO(C_6H_4)_2COOC_2H_5$ ) formed by the condensation of phenol and diethylsuccinic acid.

'I'-on-ic, 1 dai-oi-on'ik; 2 di't'-on'íc, a. Phys. Chem. Designating the formation of two ions by electrolytic dissociation. — same as DIONIC.

'I'-pol'-ít-a, 1 dai-sát-pol'it-a; 2 di't'-pol'it-a, n. [Gr.]

'I'-sat'o-gen, 1 dai-sát-o-jen; 2 di't'-sát'o-rén, n. Chem. A red crystalline compound ( $C_{12}H_{11}NaO_4$ ) readily convertible into indigo, as by reduction with ammonium sulfide. — same as SATOGEN.

'Iso-am'-yl, 1 dai-oi'-so-am'it; 2 di't'-so-am'ýl, Chem. I. a. Indicating that two isomyl radicals are present in a compound; a combining form. II. n. One of the isomeric decanes.

'Iso-bo'-nyl, 1 dai-oi'-so-bó-nýl; 2 di't'-so-bó'nýl, Chem. I. a. Indicating that two isobutyl radicals are present in a compound; as, disisobutylolefin. II. n. One of the isomeric octanes.

'Isoprop'-yl, 1 dai-oi'-so-próp'ül; 2 di't'-so-próp'ýl, Chem. — same as ISOPROPYL.

plutonic igneous rock composed essentially of plagioclase, commonly andesine, and hornblende or biotite. Some varieties contain quartz, others contain nugite. [< Gr. diorismos, division; see DIORISM.] dī'ō-ryte;—

It by heat. [LL. dipyros, < Gr. dipyros, twice put in the fire, < di-, pi-, & pyr, fire.]
dipyr-re-nous, 1 dai-pi-rē-nūs; 2 di-py-rē-nūs, a. Bot. Having two stones or pyrenes: said of a fruit. [< di- + Gr. pyrēn, stone of fruit.]

di-pyr'-i-dine, 1 dai-pi-rī-dīn, -dīn or -dīn; 2 di-py-rī-dīn, -dīn, -dīn or -dīn, n. Chem. A crystalline compound (C<sub>10</sub>H<sub>8</sub>N<sub>2</sub>) obtained by heating pyridin with sodium.

di-pyr'-i-dyl, 1 dai-pi-rī-dīl; 2 di-py-rī-dīl, n. Chem. One of a number of compounds with the formula C<sub>10</sub>H<sub>8</sub>N<sub>2</sub>, whose molecule consists of a doubled pyridyl radical.

di-quīn'-dīn, 1 dai-kwīn-dīn, -dīn or -dīn; 2 di-kwīn-dīn, -dīn, -dīn or -dīn, n. Chem. An alkaloid found in cinchona bark. [< di- + QUINIDIN.]

dir-, abbr. Director. [Radiation.]
dir-ra'-dī-a-tion, 1 dai-rā-dī-ā-shān; 2 di-rā-dī-ā-shān, n. Dir. 1 dai-rā; 2 di-rā, n. pl. [L.] The Eumelides or Furles.

Dir'-ca, 1 dīr'-kā; 2 dīr'-cā, n. Bot. 1. A genus of North-American shrubs having jointed branches, strong-fibered bark, alternate, deciduous leaves, numerous clusters of small yellowish flowers, and berry-like fruits. There are only two species, D. occidentalis, found in the Pacific coast States, and D. pubstris, the leatherwood, moosewood, or swampwood. 2. [d.] A plant of this genus. [< Gr. Dirke, fountain in Boeotia.]

Dir'-can, 1 dīr'-sān; 2 dīr'-cān, a. Class. Relating to the fountain of Dirce near Thebes, by the side of which was the house of the poet Pindar, whom Horace (Odes IV, ll. 25) called Dirceus cygnus or the Dircean swan. Dir'-cal.

Dir'-ce, 1 dīr'-sē; 2 dīr'-cē, n. Gr. Myth. Second wife of Lynceus. Because she hated her husband and his children, she and her mother, Amphion and Zethus bound her to the horns of a wild bull by which she was dragged to death. See FAR-NESE BULL, under FARNESE.

dir-dūm, 1 dīr-dūm; 2 dīr-dūm, n. (Scott.) 1. A tumult; uproar; outcry. 2. A blow; hence, any unfortunate outcome or event. 3. A scolding; rating. dir'-dam; dūrdūm.

dir-e, 1 dīr; 2 dīr, a. [DIR'-ER; DIR'-EST.] Extremely calamitous; dreadful; terrible; as, dir-e distress; a dir-e omen.

The direct curse that can befall a young man is to be the recipient of charity; to lean, while his character is forming, on others for support. MATTHEW Getting On p. 83. [s. c. 1873.]

11. Administrative ability. [< L. directio(-n), < directus; see DIRECT, a.]

SYN: aim, bearing, course, inclination, tendency, way. The direction of an object is the line of motion or of vision toward it, or the line in which the object is moving, considered from our own actual or mental standpoint. Way, literally the road or path, comes naturally to mean the direction of the road or path; conversationally, way is almost a perfect synonym of direction; as, which way did he go? or, in which direction? Bearing is the direction in which an object is seen with reference to another, and especially with reference to the points of the compass. Course is the direction of a moving object; inclination, that toward which a stationary object leans; tendency, the direction toward which anything stretches or reaches out; tendency is stronger and more motive than inclination. See CARE; OVERSIGHT; SUPERSCRIPTION. Compare synonyms for AIM.

—converse directions (Astron.), directions indicated in the reverse sequence of the signs, as the direction of a planet in Scorpio to another in Virgo.—di-rect'ion-word, n. Print. Formerly, a word placed at the lower right-hand corner of a page, variously explained as having served as an aid to imposition or as a direction to the binder. It is he [Chaucer] alone who has conversed with nature directly and without an interpreter. CHAUCER Eng. Lit. and Lang. vol. i, p. 291. [a. 1877.]

3. With original purpose, intention, and action; without indirection. 4. Immediately; at once; as soon as possible; as, I will come directly. When preceding a dependent clause directly becomes, through the omission of when or as soon as, a quasi-conjunction; as, directly he comes, send him to me: an incorrect English usage.

Many English novelists use this word as the equivalent of 'as soon as'; thus, Directly he arrived, he called for ale. 'I gave him the letter directly I saw him,' etc. But, this use of the word has not gained currency in the United States; and as it has been used in England since the days of Pelham, that is, for nearly forty years, we may hope to escape it altogether.
